each side of the stairways facing the elevators are placed two carved marble benches which fit into a recess especially made for this purpose. Directly back of the stairways and in front of main hall entrance are placed the two elevators furnishing access to all floors. The bronze grill work is designed to conform to the classic treatment around the door, which is in itself somewhat refined by the long slender brackets; thereby maintaining a harmonious scale between the bronzework and stone.

The main hall is entered through a double colonnade of highly polished syenite marble, the gener-
