

to strip its partyism of the use-and-wonts that hinder the co-operation that makes for progress.

This tenth article in the "Canadian Creed of Patriotism" herein projected, is an embodiment of all that may lead Canadians away from being too disquieted over the secondaries in State affairs, to the overlooking of the essentials of a right democratic rule. There is but one Canada for us Canadians, no matter what province we are residents in. And every enervating plea advanced directly or indirectly against there being but one Canada for us, either now or hereafter, has a germ of the treasonable about it. The struggle between a voracious tyrannical autocracy in Central Europe and a world-awakened democracy is the great event of the age. The issue of that struggle may or may not be an imperilling of our Christian civilization. What we do know is that it originated in the breeding of a national envy and hatred on the part of Germany towards Germany's neighbour-nations by an overbearing militant autocracy. Nor can the issue be other in a country when a racial hatred breeds a racial hatred within its commonwealth wherein democratic rule has no overbearing autocracy to deal with. Canada, for the moment, has made a selection from its two political parties, to see to the oversight of its federal affairs. The disaffections bred of partyism should therefore play no part either in inaugurating or perpetuating the odious game of hatred for hatred, while a non-party government continues in public favour with our Canadian democracy. With the warning, therefore, before us of what has happened in Europe, on the largest scale possible, from a Hohenzollern autocracy, may we Canadians not wisely seek by a democratic co-operation, to allay all irritancies that make for national disintegration, and thus reserve our strength for the national enterprises that make for national advancement ?
