Boiler

There are five separate boiler sections in the Sovereign hot water furnace, each section being a little boiler in itself, and each contributing its share of heat to the radiating system. The first little boiler, the one directly over the fire, is larger than the other boiler sections above it. It holds one-third more water, so that a hot fire quickens circulation and increases radiation without ever causing the water to boil. The unit principle of construction and the larger first section are exclusive features with the "Sovereign.
