GOLDWIN SMITH.

Goldwin Smith is dead and Toronto and Canada have lost their most conspicuous private citizen. Both were onored when he resolved to identify himself with the Dominion, and notwithstanding much and sometimes grave antagonism between his freely voiced convictions and prevalent pub-lic opinion, Goldwin Smith grew steadily into popular respect and affection. There were many reasons for this. His established fame and reputation as a scholar, historian and educationalist, his high personal character, his mastery of style, the lofty ethical ideals which guided the conduct of his daily life, his firm but temperate method of controversy and an innate urbanity, slightly veiled, tho it was, by a manner verging on the austere, all conspired to invest him with an unusual and altogether wholesome influence over the rising Canadian generation. This was aided, to a remarkable degree, also by his bent towards journalism.

Had Goldwin & Smith written only books, he could scarcely have become so well known as he was. But the readiness with which he turned to the columns of the press, and the constant reference to him made on occasions of moment, brought him very near all classes of society. No doubt the habit of expressing sentiment and conviction on current events immediately on their emergence, exposed him to attacks. But until advancing years limited his wide range of activity, he continued to bear his full share in public discussion. In this way many Canadians to whom Goldwin Smith would have remained only a name, became, despite themselves, familiar with the main directions of his thought and learned to appreciate qualities of heart and temper which, if more widely prevalent, would greatly mollify the bitterness of partisan rancor.

Deep; too, was the effect of ed, unostentatious life, his generous and discriminating charity, his large benefactions, crowned by the bequest of The Grange, that splendid colonial mansion and park, which will, let us hope, ever remain a memorial of his affection for the city of his adoption. His services in aid of Toronto University and higher education, his labor for social betterment and for the moral uplifting of the people, cannot be forgotten. Nor in this connection should his continuing interest in the newspaper press of Canada and of Ontario and Toronto in particular, be overlooked. His was ever the cordial and helpful hand for the working journalist, and his deep interest in the Toronto Press Club and other press associations was evinced by the readiness with which he placed himself at their disposal. The press of Canada owes much to Goldwin Smith, his counsel and example. There can be no more enduring tribute to his memory than the maintenance of the high standard he enjoined and always himself main-

BRITISH PARLIAMENTARY OUT-LOOK.

To-day the British Parliament will resume under very different circumstances from those under contemplation in the end of April, when it first stood adjourned. But for the unexpected death of King Edward the veto controversy would now have been approaching its height, with an early dissolution as the only means of escape from an otherwise irremovable deadlock. That untoward event renders impossible the carrying out of the government's program as originally formulated. Further supply votes must be taken, a regency bill passed, the new King's civil list adjusted, and the budget for the current year aproved. The government is understood have in preparation a bill modifying he terms of the King's coronation declaration, and it is possible that the establishment of an insurance scheme against unemployment may also be attempted

Even if these measures be treated as non-controversial the time at the disposal of the government is no more than sufficient, assuming that an effort will be made to bring the session to a close by the middle of August. The veto resolutions can therefore only be dealt with during a special autumn session or postponed till next year. As to this it is reported that the government has not yet reached a decision. On the other hand, Lord Rosebery is said to have the determination to press forward the debate on his resolutions, in which case the government might find it necesary to introduce their own veto resolutions which have already re- Galt Will Give It Another Trial This ceived the imprimatur of the house of commons. HITTING THE TRAIL

ALL WHO RUN SHOULD READ

The World asks the people of Ontario, who are so vitally interested in municipal institutions, to take note of things that are happening these days.

their legislature, and are sovereign in many respects and that the prime minister of this province, Sir James Whitney, and the legislature exercise these sovereign powers. Among the powers exercised by the legislature is that of creating corporations to carry on business, to render services to the public, and do other things; but always that these corporations are absolutely the creation, the creature of the legislature and of the people of the province creating them; that they are dependent for existence on a legislature that can snuff them out of existence like a candle. One would think, under these circumstances, that corporations so created would have some little regard for the power creating them; would show even some measure of respect and deference, perhaps even of filial piety, if we might use such a phrase; but, contrariwise, they are insolent, arrogant, deflant of the power that created them and that could put them out of business like a flash if it saw fit to do so. We ask the people of Toronto and the people of Ontario to also observe the attitude of the Toronto Railway towards this city and toward the legislation of the Ontario legislature and toward Sir James Whitney, who happens to be the people's head man and champion, and to observe, for instance, the statement of Mr. Robert John Fleming, manager of the Toronto Railway, that he will see the City of Toronto in Halifax as far as any legislation of the Province of Ontario is concerned until he can refer it to the judicial committee of the Privy Council in England. But isn't he a czar?

If we were Sir James Whitney, we would pass an act saying that any creature of the legislature of Ontario that questioned any act of its creator by going to the Privy Council would by that very fact cease to exist. Never was such arrogance, such insolence, such defiance of the sovereign power in this country!

Then, take the case of the electric corporations of this province

(all originally creatures of the province), all of which joined in a secret conspiracy to defame, discredit and stigmatize the government and the legislature of Ontario in England, the money market of the world. There is something worse than all this, and that is that the chief of the provincial executive should have been a chief director of all this corporation arrogance. Once the office of attorney-general of this province was used for corporations and the enslavement of the public rather than for their benefit! Associated in this defamation have been some of the banks of this country, who happen to live and have their being by act of the people, and, most of all, by the savings of the people which have passed into their hands.

These are particular cases, but all over the province you will find corporations created by the legislature and corporations which have made contracts with municipalities defying the legislature and its laws; defying the municipalities with which they have made contracts; refusing to carry out their obligations or carrying them out in an inferior and illegal way; and all threatening to go to the judicial committee in England! To hades with Whitney is their

What, then, is the moral of the whole thing? It is for municipalities to have nothing to do with these corporations; to create as few of them as possible, and let the municipalities do their own work as best they can.

All this defiance of the legislature, of the municipalities, of the people, is carried on by means of a law trust created in this province by legislature. In fact, we have made a close corporation guild of the lawyers of this country and given them special protection and privileges apparently for the express purpose of advising corporations how to beat the public, how to evade their agreements and how to set at naught the common law of the country as passed in the legislature. Instead of Sir James Whitney half apologizing as he did yesterday for his necessary legislation in connection with the Toronto Railway, he should stand on his dignity and assert the right of the people and the sovereignty of the people and to say to these corporations that if they do not behave themselves he will find further means of disciplining them and of disciplining the legal profession, which has turned into a public enemy. James Whitney, by his sovereign power in the legislature and his power of taxation, can also bring the G.T. and the C.P. to their knees in the matter of the service they give the public of this province, if he chose to assert himself. It is high time that the insolence of men like Robert Fleming and all these other men who made the attack on the Ontario government in London and the corporations that refuse to carry out their agreements came to an end. Most regrettable of all is it that newspapers can be found every day in the week that live on money contributed by the public and yet who, by professing religion and charity, manage to fool the public and to befriend and justify the misconduct and insolence of the cor-

HAD JOBS TO GO TO

And All Are Now at Work, Says Immigration Official. Replying to a story yesterday that brought to a story yesterday that a number of immigrants were recently brought to Toronto, under the auspices of the Ontario Government, who were practically without funds, and that the immigration officials were not performing their duty, Donald Sutherland, director of colonization at the parliament buildings, said last night:

"We had a party of 59 arrive here on

"We had a party of 59 arrive here on May 28. It is true that many of these were not in possession of much money, but as they were all destined for farm was quite regular. We had applications for every one, and could have were going direct into employment there was no danger of their becoming paupers. Their passage money was advanced by the Ontario Government, and will be repaid from their wages. The whole arrangement was made by Mr. Colcock in England.

"We sent a man from the department down to meet them, and when he ex-plained to the immigration officials that all were going to work, they let them thru, otherwise they would have had to return to England. Since they
