PUBLIC OPINION BACK OF HOME RULE

Effort to Heat up Old Animosities Declared Failure

WANT MATTER SETTLED

Views of the Westminster Gazette—Never Mind Law, But The Covenant, Says Carson—Case Set Out By John Dillon

(Times' Special Correspondence)

Dublin, July 31.—The "Westminster Gazette" (Liberal), says:—

"For our part, we are convinced that the government need not have the slightest fear of public opinion in going forward with the Irish bill. Nothing in recent months has failed more signally than the effort to keep up the old anti-Irish animosities. Electioneers who want votes dwell on almost any topic in preference. The general sentiment is in favor of a settlement of the Irish question, and a vast number of people are of Lord Dunraven's opinion that it would be a disgrace to statesmanship if, after all these years of debate and agitation, parliament made shipwreck with another Irish bill. We could imagine nothing more disastrous for the government than to blanch before Sir Edward Carson's threats, and appeal helplessly to the electors for guidance, not on the principle of home rule but on the particular way of solving the Ulster difficulty. That is precisely the kind of problem which the electors expect statesmen to solve for themselves, and they will have an account to settle either with a government which professes itself helpless or with fanatical opponents who try to make a settlement impossible."

Ulster Unlikely Plans

What Ulster will do if home rule is established is now set beyond all doubt by the drama witnessed at Craigavon when Sir Edward Carson addressed 200,000 Orangemen. Sir Edward chose the emotional scene to make a final proclamation of Ulster's intention.

"We intend to take over the government of Ulster for ourselves. I know nothing of legality or illegality. My covenant is to me all that is meant by legality or illegality."

That is the organized determination of Sir Edward Carson's party, to take effect from the day that home rule is declared. A general order will be issued that no Orangeman or Unionist shall pay taxes or rates which would go to Dublin and that the decisions of the courts shall not be recognized. The organization will be quite completed this autumn.

Should a Parliament be sitting in Dublin towards the end of next year, a Unionist provisional government would be sitting in Belfast thwarting every effort at every turn which the Dublin parliament might make for the purpose of carrying on what they would be pleased to call the government of Ireland.

Speech by John Dillon

Under the auspices of the Birkenhead Liberal Association, John Dillon, M.P., addressed a large meeting in the Hippodrome, Birkenhead, on home rule. Before the union, he said, Ireland was loyal, a great nation, proud of her parliament, although an ancient parliament, but still a parliament more or less responsive to Irish public opinion. Then came the union, and the home rule movement was born. The opponents of home rule were talked about a general election before the bill was passed. Ireland had been three general elections on home rule. When in Ireland, however, the ancient nation was to be sold, her corrupt members were bought and the people of Ireland by ten to one were against the union. There was no election in recent years was due to the action of the Land League, the members of which were denounced as revolutionaries, Socialists, and conspirators of the worst character. The Tory Party had about as much to do with the purchase as a fly which had landed on a wheel and which might cry out: "What a glorious dust I am raising."

Nations have hoped that under a democratic home rule parliament religious dissension would be eradicated in Ireland, and that was their ideal of the future.

"We are told," he continued, "that the people of Ulster will not have home rule, and that they will rebel. The chief characteristic of the recent July 12 celebration in Ulster was this, that all the leaders, from Sir Edward Carson down, were most particular to assure their followers that under no circumstances whatever would the king's soldiers fire upon them or use their bayonets. That is a beautiful way to carry out a revolution. You must not suppose that I mean to insinuate that the Ulstermen are cowards. They are no cowards; they are a brave, fighting race. But there will be no civil war in Ulster, because none of those things which they seem to fear will be done to them. It is not because I regard them as cowards that I say they won't fight, but because I do not regard them as lunatics."

The essence of this controversy in Ulster, proceeded Mr. Dillon, was because they had enjoyed ascendancy and the monopoly of political power, and no instance in history could be found in which such a minority had abandoned their ascendancy without a struggle. Ulster wanted to be top dog, and "we say," exclaimed Mr. Dillon, "that there shall be no top dogs in Ireland." We say that there shall be equality and liberty, and that the people must rule. Do they expect us, the descendants of a fighting race, to lie down and submit to be trampled upon by a minority who are not ashamed to declare that they hate as much as they despise us? We will teach them, as we have met and beaten them, that though they may hate us they cannot despise us.

"We will not submit to insult and tyranny on the part of a fraction of Ulster. We have taught our people that they can win by constitutional means. We do not import arms, abuse the king, and threaten to shoot his soldiers. We are the true Unionists and the day which saw Mr. Asquith pass in triumph through the Irish capital opened a new and brilliant chapter in the history of the two peoples." Mr. Dillon's address was received with much enthusiasm.

LITERARY TREASURES

Priceless Documents That Have Been Saved From Destruction By Chance

(London Tit-Bits)

Hidden away in national museums and libraries, and zealously guarded, are priceless manuscripts and books which, but for a fortunate chance, might have been lost to the world. The chief treasure of a museum at St. Petersburg is the oldest-known Greek manuscript of the New Testament, which was about to be burnt by the monks of a Syrian monastery, when, by a lucky chance, one of the priests, struck with the antiquity of the manuscript, interfered in time to save what had been thought to be valueless. The incident reminds one that the Magna Charta, which is carefully guarded in a glass case in the British Museum, was saved from destruction by Sir Robert Cotton, who, so the story goes, one day had entered his tailor's shop prepared for a fortunate chance, when the tailor, who was about to cut up for patterns the ancient-looking document with its many imposing seals attached. Although Sir Robert did not at first recognize the value of the document, he judged it was something of historic interest, and purchased it from the tailor for a few shillings. After passing through the hands of various generations of his family it at last found a resting-place in the British Museum.

Discovered by Chance

An interesting story, too, is attached to a valuable Greek manuscript which came to the Bishop of Uganto in a startling way. It was wrapped round a fish and brought into the bishop's presence. By the merest chance he examined it, and found it to be part of a treatise thought for many centuries to be lost. The worthy bishop hastened to the stall of the salesman in the market, where the fish had been bought just in time to save the remaining pages of this literary treasure.

One of the most highly-prized manuscripts of recent times, that of "In Memoriam," was rescued just in time from a cupboard in a house where Pennycuik had lived for some time as a bachelor. As a matter of fact, it was to the poet himself that the recovery was due, for he remembered that the book wherein he had transcribed the original draft had been hastily thrown into the cupboard where he had been accustomed to keep pickles and jams. When the friends sent by the poet to recover the manuscript arrived on the scene the contents of the cupboard had been removed by the landlady, who was just then engaged in her task of house-cleaning, and who tartly advised her visitors that they had come none too soon, in so much as she would that day have burnt all the "trash" she had found.

Among other valuable manuscripts discovered by chance might be mentioned the famous Journal of his Italian travels written by Montaigne, now looked upon as one of the greatest of French literary treasures, while Milton's commonplace book, wherein were entered the rough notes and plans of his poems, which for more than 200 years was lost, finally turned up in the garret of a neglected house in London.

GEM'S BILL A GOOD ONE

A thrilling two reel production entitled "The Rival Engineers," was presented yesterday at the Gem Theatre to a very pleased audience at each show. The feature was to have been "The Tiger Lily," a three reel picture by the Vitaphone Company, but owing to some misunderstanding, it was impossible to show it. The railway story was substituted and gave much pleasure. It is a drama replete with sensationalism and thrilling venture, while there is also a touch of tenderness in many of its scenes of life amongst the railway men which appealed to the more sympathetic side of one's nature, and create augmented interest in the outcome. The picture will be presented again tonight.

There were also two Essanay pieces, "Building the bridge and dam at Chatanooga," a highly instructive and interesting presentation, and a comedy with many laughs and giggles, "The Browns Study Astrology." Arthur P. Cameron as usual caused more fun and the orchestra played several pleasing selections.

A programme of pictures that stay by an audience from start to finish in as pleasing a manner as that shown at the Star last night cannot help but have a lasting impression and be one of the many performances that will help boost along the already popularity of the photo-play. The subjects are all good stories, full of new ideas. "The Sheriff's Baby," by the Biograph Company, is a western drama full of adventures, with groups of Indians and cowboys on the more for fully twenty minutes. "The Game Warden," by the Kalem Co., is a thrilling story of the Highlands of New Jersey. "The Running Away of Dorrie" is a beautiful Edison drama with their best people in the cast, and is handsomely staged. "Trick and the Press Agent," by the Kalem Co., has Miss Ruth Roland and a crowd of the Kalem boys in a very funny mix-up. This show will be at the Star tonight.

A silver loving cup has been presented to Elias Toy, a Pennsylvania railroad conductor, who has worked continuously for fifty years without losing a day or receiving a reprimand.
