NOTHING REAL BUT LOVE. Whose conquers the earth,
Winning its riches and fame,
Comes to the evening at last,
The sunset of the threescore years,
Confessing that Love was real,
All the rest was a dream!

All the rest was a dream!
The sum of his gains, is dross;
The song in his praise is mute.
The wreath of his laurels fades;
But the kiss of his early love
Still burns on his trembling lip.
The spirit of one he loved. The spirit of one he loved.
Hallows his dreams at night.
A little while, and the scenes
Of the play of Life are closed;
Come, let us rest an hour.
And by the pleasant streams,
Under the fresh, green trees.
Let us walk hand in hand,
And think of the days that were.

Four hundred artificial eyes per week is the ordinary production of a Paris manufactory. You can buy a good new eye from the concern for about £1. This won't wear more than two years unless you are extremely careful about winking but then you can have it taken out and polished so that it will look as well and wear as well as new for some time longer. The Parisian eye-makers send a good many second-hand eyes to the poor heathen of India and the Sandwich Islands.
