

In Conclusion

The use of Fleischmann's Compressed Yeast by physicians in the treatment of disease, and as a household remedy as well, originated spontaneously, as a direct result of the merit of the product. For many years its therapeutic value was "advertised" only by "word of mouth" of its users, and with no effort whatever on the part of The Fleischmann Company.

The production of Fleischmann's Compressed Yeast began in 1868. It was and is used for making bread, with which use every baker and housewife in America is thoroughly familiar.

To provide Fleischmann's Compressed Yeast for baking purposes only, there is today required the full capacity of eleven great laboratories, or factories, located in widely separated sections of the United States and Canada. There is a distributing agency in every city in the country, where the daily supply of fresh yeast is cut with wires into the familiar