to buy ten to twenty tons of certain kinds of leather at the prices quoted by sellers, and having their orders declined because the supplies were not procurable. Leather merchants have very small reserve stocks, and under existing conditions they are absolutely indifferent to business unless the extreme limit of the enhanced rates is paid.

There is, at the present time, says another report, an enormous shortage of leather, in order to meet the requirements of the boot and shoe manufacturers in England, and necessarily there is a large demand for hides of all kinds, both dry and wet, also sheepskins.

The total importation of hides into England during 1905 was in the neighborhood of £1,700,000 sterling, and of this amount less than £18,000 came from Canada, whilst during the fiscal year 1904-1905 there was an export to the United States of $2,629,116. The prices offered here at the present time are exceptional, and it is felt by Canadian trade agents that the hide exporters in Canada would do well at the present juncture to get in touch with the leather men of England.
