Captain Malcolm, the master of the concluded that she was either stranded or had anchored to save herself from drifting ashore.

He proceeded with the engineer of the Laurel in a launch to the craft, which proved to be a fifty-ton American-built schooner hard and fast on the reef. She was so far up that the engineer waded out to her, when two nen appeared. He asked for the captain, and was told by the elder of the two that he was in charge. No satisfactory information could be got as to the whereabouts of the rest of the crew, and offers of assistance were declined.

Two days later the two men went aboard the Laurel and asked the captain to take them on to Fiji. The local native magistrate had, however, warned the captain not to take the men with him as he suspected them, and intended to send them to Tarawa, the headquarters of the British resident commissioner in the Gilbert group, for inquiry.

In reply to Captain Malcolm the elder man then stated his name was J. Taylor and that he hailed from Manchester, that the younger man's name was G. Jackson and that he came from London. He added that they were bound for Tahiti. CHANGED NAME.

Captain Malcolm pointed out that the vessel had no name painted on her, and asked Taylor what he called her.
