

DYED TO SAVE HIS LIFE.

Lord Altamont's Unique Experience During Mutiny. Fearful and exciting indeed were the experiences of British residents in India during the great Mutiny of 1857, and none of them more so than those of Lord Altamont, the eldest son and heir of the Marquess of Sligo, and his mother.

The mutiny broke out Lord Altamont who had been born in India, was a boy seven months old, his father at that time being in the Indian Civil Service and stationed at Bengal. Just before the natives mutinied the marquess had been ordered to a hill station, and his wife, who was only twenty years of age, took her baby to a place called Bankipur. There they heard that at Dinapur, six miles away, the natives had decided to mutiny and murder the European officers.

The terrors of the night, as they waited expecting to hear every moment the yells of the rebel soldiers coming to attack them, were added to by one lady who tried to cut her hair and tried to throw herself down a well. The next morning, however, relief came, and Lord Altamont's mother drove to the opinion she had that miles down the river, which had also been fortified, to stay with friends.

Thinking that she might be killed, she crept out of the carriage and hid herself behind a tree. Here she remained with other Europeans, besieged for a fortnight, their lives depending on the fidelity of a few Sikhs. It was then that Lord Altamont's black nurse suggested to his mother that, as a possible means of saving his life, he should be dyed and passed off as her child, and this was done.

The oldest mummy. The mummy known as Ra-Nefes, which is in the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, has been described as the oldest mummy known. The date assigned to it by Prof. Elliot Smith was the age of Snefru, the beginning of Egypt's Fourth Dynasty, about 3700 years B.C. Some human remains, however, have now been discovered at Sakkara, about fifteen miles from Cairo, belonging to the period of the end of the Second and the beginning of the Third Dynasty, about 4000 years B.C. Among them is the skeleton of a woman about thirty-five years of age, which was found completely intact in a large series of bandages, and next to the body was a corroded woven cloth. The corrosion, says Prof. Smith, was probably evidence that some material (probably crude natron) was applied to the surface of the body, with a view to its preservation, and he has thus been able to trace to a higher antiquity than had previously been done, the use of this method for preserving the body of the dead.

What a Sermon! Dr. Norman Macleod was once preaching in a district in Ayrshire, where the reading of a sermon is regarded as the thing to do, which the minister can be guilty. When the congregation dispersed, an old woman, overflowing with enthusiasm, addressed her neighbor.

Until the reign of Charles II. the creation of a knight of the Bath was a somewhat trying ordeal. He was conducted to a chamber at the Tower of London, where a bath was prepared, into which he was plunged. He then resumed his clothes, with a hermit's hood of russet cloth, and thus attired, kept his vigil until daybreak, when he stretched a brief rest, and in the morning, habited in costly robes, he rode to the court, where he received the sword and spurs and was dubbed a knight of the Bath by the King, for he had taken a bath — a courageous act in the fifteenth century. — London Strand.

Prince Near Foot of Class. Prince Albert, second son of King George, who was born in 1856, stood six-foot-four in order of merit in a list of sixty-five persons who underwent an examination for naval cadets last month.

Bar in Ostrich Feathers. One of the unsolved problems connected with ostrich breeding in South Africa is the defective bar in so many feathers which are otherwise comparatively perfect. These bars are not found in wild bird feathers.

Memorial to Walton. A stained glass window to the memory of Isaac Walton, the complete angler, is to be placed in Winchester Cathedral, where he was buried. It has been decided to make a special appeal to fishermen for funds.

TOOK LONG START.

Robbery of Bullion Planned Eighteen Months in Advance. There have been quite a number of cases of robberies of gold in transit on railway and steamers of a similar character to the one which was perpetrated the other day, when, it will be remembered, $50,000 worth of sovereigns disappeared mysteriously from a consignment which was being sent from London to Alexandria.

This robbery was carefully planned, but the method of carrying it out was the simplest. A man drove up to the wharf and claimed the boxes, describing the marks upon them, and giving other satisfactory proofs of his good faith. Ten minutes afterwards the real owner arrived; and then, of course, "the fat was in the fire." Clever detectives succeeded in running the thieves to earth and recovering most of the stolen gold.

The individual who was the "brains of the plot," proved to be a certain Casper, a shipping clerk. He it was who noted the marks on the boxes and imparted the information to a notorious "fence" named "Money." Money, who drove up to the wharf and claimed the gold.

There were several others in the plot, and a remarkable feature of the case was the manner in which the conspirators tried to "do" one another at the last moment in official quarters. Thus, Moses was proved to have paid his confederates a much lower price for the gold than he actually received besides which he secretly abstracted $9,000 worth of dust and buried it in his beer cellar.

Four men were in the plot. They were Burgess, a guard on the South-Eastern Railway; Tester, a clerk in the traffic department at London bridge; and Pierce and Agar, two professional burglars. Tester gave information as to the date the gold was to be consigned to the railway company for conveyance to the continent. Burgess, who was the guard on the mail train, passed it on to Pierce and Agar.

Parsee Burial Customs. A Bombay correspondent, writing of the burial customs of the Parsees, says: "The approach of that transition we call death is a signal for the relatives to leave the presence of the dying one, the priest alone remaining to whisper Zend-Avesta precepts into his ear. He in turn passes out of the room and admits a dog, who is trained to gaze steadily into the face of the dying one. A dog is accounted the only living creature that can tolerate the evil spirit, so the 'saddid,' or 'dog stare,' is the last sight the Parsee has on earth. No human shadow must intervene; otherwise the guardian virtue of the dog's gaze is annulled."

Miss Stead Talks With W. T. Miss Estelle W. Stead, daughter of William T. Stead, who perished in the Titanic disaster, declares she has received many spirit messages from her father within a few weeks.

Leopold's Long Bed. A bed of the abnormal length of seven feet, which forms part of the Marlborough House furniture, has rather an amusing history. The late King Leopold, who was the guest of King Edward at his town house on several occasions, complained to his host of the difficulty he experienced in comfortably bestowing his six-foot-four length into an ordinary-sized bedstead, whereupon a seven-foot brass bedstead was immediately procured for him.

THE HONOR LIST.

How Fleet Street Obtains the News of the New Knights. The dawn of a new year means a rise in social status for many men who have "made good" in their profession or in service to the state. January the first marks an epoch in their lives. For the "man in the street" the newspapers of that date contain one of their most popular features—the list of honors bestowed by the King. Everyone is keen to read the names of new peers, Privy Counsellors, baronets, and knights.

The list is issued to the press overnight. Strictly, there are three lists, issued respectively from the Prime Minister's official residence, from the Colonial Office and from the India Office. Typewritten on foolscap sheets, and enclosed in official envelopes bearing on the flap the Royal Arms, they are conveyed by Government messengers to the offices of the London morning papers and to the headquarters of the news agencies.

The notes setting out the records of the recipients of honors are the first important in some cases convey little meaning to the readers. Rewards are given so often to men whose public service has been done quietly that their names are unfamiliar. Hence the task of the journalist is not altogether an easy one. He must invariably help. Doing valuable work in his own line, the new knight may shrink from publicity. Important service to the state, like the most laudatory practices in the profession, does not always lend itself to wide-spread advertisement. Very often it is in the public interest that it should not. But this fact does not help the journalist called upon to set out interesting details.

Once a Pagan Temple? St. Paul's Cathedral, according to some authorities, was in pagan times a temple of Diana. This theory was rejected by Sir Christopher Wren, who designed the present structure. He believed there had been a building on the spot, erected by Christians in the time of the Roman occupation, which was demolished by the pagan Saxons. It was rebuilt by King Ethelbert in 610 and burned down in 961. The structure was rebuilt in the same year and again destroyed in 1087. A new church, the present one, was begun and not completed for 300 years. It was known as Old St. Paul's and had an extension to 1561. It was partially restored and finally destroyed by the great fire of 1666. The present church was started in 1675 and completed in 1710. It is 500 feet in length and 118 feet broad in the form of a Latin cross. The dome is 384 feet above the ground and 110 feet in diameter.

Hats at Table. It was the correct thing in the seventeenth century for men to wear their hats at table. "The Rules of Civility, or Certain Ways of Deportment," published in 1673, gives minute directions. Supposing "a person of quality shall sit to dine with him," it is prescribed that when the person invited is sit he must keep himself covered till the rest sit down and the person of quality has put on his hat.

Winding "Big Ben." "Big Ben," is the name of the great bell in the Parliament clock tower, in London. It was cast in 1858 and is of immense size. The winding of Big Ben is an amusing history. The late hour weight and the quarter weights have to be wound twice a week, the operation taking about five hours in each case. The weight for the quarter is just one ton and a half, and the hour weight is over a ton. The pendulum, thirteen and a half feet long, vibrates once in two seconds and weighs nearly 700 pounds.

A Dry April. But two-hundredths of an inch of rain was measured at Greenwich observatory in England in April, making it the driest month recorded in a century.

To Protect Miners. An electric alarm that gives warning when a mine roof begins to move has been invented by an Australian.

Australia Now Second. As a butter exporting country Australia now ranks second, Denmark being first.

Footlights. Footlights were first put on the English stage by David Garrick, who borrowed the practice from Italy.
