The Gadfly.

For monumental stupidity comment to the blind advocate of a free trade policy in the midst of an ever increasing company of protective tariff countries. The ostrich, which hides its head in the sand at the approach of an enemy, is a wise old fellow in comparison—concealed in the sand, his head at least is safe from injury temporarily.

There are some of these blind advocates of free trade remaining even unto this day. That is to say, they would have Great Britain remain a free trade country but they are quite satisfied for Canada to continue to be 'cursed' with protection so long as government is in the hands of their party friends.

They are blind to the fact that British manufacturers in almost all lines of export trade have found it necessary to curtail their output and lay off thousands of their workmen or employ them in part time only? And why is it that in the matter of domestic trade purely many other British manufacturers have been forced to do the same? It is entirely because other nations have adopted protective policies while Great Britain has with stupid tenacity stuck to her jug-handled free trade.

The free trader denies that this is the correct answer, and gives us a better one, the statement that there is less pauperism in Great Britain to-day than under protection many years ago, or that some labor leader who has just returned from Germany is convinced that all Germany owes its protection is a grudge—not very conclusive arguments to say the least.

The blind free trader (for England) declares that free trade enables the Englishmen to 'get the best of the world offers at the open market price.' Splendid, but not very stomach filling to the poor Englishman who doesn't happen to possess the open market price or any other price, because the flooding of the country with the best of the world offers at the open market price has resulted in his being thrown out of employment.

But if free trade produces such lovely conditions for Great Britain, why do not these Canadian advocates seek for similar conditions here for Canada? What a waste of money and effort it was for so many big United States manufacturing concerns to move over into Canada. For instance, the Oliver Plow Company and the International Harvester Company and dozens of others. Why didn't we pull down our tariff wall and let all the goods made by these various concerns in their American plants come in freely at open market price?

The working men and business men find the presence of these big concerns of vital importance, and they are quite happy in submitting to an abomination in the eyes of some lot-owners and are regarded a decided nuisance. Put yourself in the 'other man's' place, and 'the Man on the Street' is confident you will see the custom as he sees it.

A rumor that the old American House property, which was reported some time ago to have been purchased by the government for the erection of a public building, has gone to private hands, has reached the ear of 'The Man on the Street.' Naturally Wolfville people will be disappointed to learn that there is any foundation for the rumor. 'The Man on the Street' has this consolation to offer, however, in private possession the property may be improved in appearance so as not longer to be a disgrace to the town. At present it is anything but a thing of beauty.

In Memoriam.

At Newtonville, July 7th, after a few weeks' illness, death came to Mrs. Olivia Jordan, relict of the late Michael Jordan, at the advanced age of sixty years.

In the early age of fourteen she gave her heart to Jesus and was baptized into the First Horton Baptist church. Living a quiet, consistent Christian life, she endeared herself to a large circle of friends and acquaintances and will be greatly missed from the social meetings she loved so well. Out of a large family only one brother, Capt. James Eagles, of Wolfville, survives her. She leaves three sons, Henry A., of Boston; Leverett H., of Dorchester, Mass.; and Charles A., who resides at the homestead and with whom she lived; and two daughters, Mrs. Charles A. Schofield, of Medford, Mass.; and Mrs. Harison Schofield, of Newtonville.

The funeral services were conducted by Pastor A. L. Powell at the Gaspeau church Sunday afternoon. Interment in Gaspeau cemetery beside her husband.

Presentation to Mr. Noble Crandall.

Mr. Noble Crandall has for many years been doing home missionary work, first on Gaspeau Mountain and more recently in Wolfville. The building of the Tabernacle was largely the result of his efforts in that direction. Since its erection he has been for the most of the time in charge of the work in that place which he has done at a considerable sacrifice of time and means.

He was unexpectedly called to meet with a number of friends of the Tabernacle work last Thursday evening at the close of the prayer meeting, when a brief address and a purse were presented by Rev. M. P. Freeman, to which he responded, expressing the unexpected pleasure given him by this token of appreciation of his work.

Rev. E. D. Weather being called upon gave a brief address in commendation of the work Mr. Crandall has done in behalf of an important section of our community.
