Propagation of the Faith

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CENTENARY.

Lord Morris, formerly Prime Minister of Newfoundland, opened yesterday afternoon the missionary exhibition which is part of the National Celebration of the Centenary of the Association for the Propagation of the Faith and of the Tercentenary of the Congregation of Propaganda and which is being held until October 2 in the precincts of Westminster Cathedral. In the chair was Monsignor Howlett, Administrator of the Cathedral, and around the platform were missionaries in the dress of various orders famed for their work all over the world. Capuchins, Carmelites, Jesuits, White Fathers, Marists, the Belgian Missionaries of Ghent, Franciscans, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, and many others, their habits striking a sombre note beside the bright purple of the Monsignor's cape and the trimmings of his cassock.

Monsignor Howlett, in explaining the meaning of the celebrations, said that since the Catholic Church first took the world for a pupil, she had been "delivering the goods." Too often the missionary work of the Church, colossal, catholic, and universal in every civilized and uncivilized part of the world, operating for the good of all classes and conditions of men, was forgotten by the laity—it was a case of out of sight, out of mind. During this year the Sovereign Pontiff had raised the Association for the Propagation of the Faith to a higher status and honored it with apostolic authority to have its headquarters in Rome. Held under the shadow of the Metropolitan Cathedral, he hoped this would be the first of a series of such exhibitions.

Lord Morris said that from the earliest times the missionary's call had been to all nations and to any one, and the exhibition showed that had been done from the early days of Paul down to those of Father Damien. Here in England, Scotland, and Ireland, they owed everything to the early missionaries who centuries ago had lifted the pall of darkness that covered everything and converted the people to Christianity. The ruined Cathedrals and Abbeys throughout the country showed how great was the catholicity of bygone times. Over fifteen hundred years ago, St. Augustine had brought the faith to England and St. Patrick to Ireland. Even in Newfoundland, where the British flag flew first outside these isles, he had heard himself, when he had penetrated among the oldest Indian tribes, traditions of the early Jesuit Fathers, who had brought the Faith in the early days—a tradition to be found in Longfellow's "Hiawatha." Nowadays the cost of training and travel had increased so much that the sinews of war were badly needed to carry on the work of the missionaries.

The exhibition was visited during the afternoon and evening by a large number of the laity and clergy, some of whom had come long distances to be present. The African village, with its huts and articles of native dress and objects of ornamentation was a great attraction, and the Shrine of Confucius, the Devil Hut, were also of interest. On the stalls, some of which were presided over by nuns, but mostly by members of the missionary orders, were native weapons of many kinds, a Burmese piano, curious idols and native dolls, and a Chinese writing set, with which the missionary in charge was writing in native characters.

The conference in the Cathedral Hall, was opened by Rev. Francis Henry, Superior-General of St. Joseph's Foreign Missionary Society, Mill Hill. He said the Catholic missions were different from those of sects which wished to evangelize. The head of an order could not send his missionaries wherever he wished, but he had to go to Rome for direction and refer to the great Congregation of Propaganda. The Rev. T. A. Sullivan (organising secretary) said that two-fifths of the non-Christian population of the world were grouped under the British flag. The Catholic mission had a longer and more intensive course of training than those of any other religion. The main objects of St. Joseph's Society, founded by the late Cardinal Vaughan in 1866, was the supply of missionary priests; there were about five missionary colleges with about 350 students in course of education. A cinematograph film illustrating the works of the Mill Hill Fathers in the Upper Nile district in Uganda was then shown and was said to be the only Catholic film.

To-day, at 10.30 a.m., there is the solemn opening of the Triduum and Pontifical High Mass by the Right Rev. John Lally, Bishop of Plymouth. The exhibition continues, re-opening at 11.30 a.m. Lectures will be given during the day in the Cathedral Hall, and at 8 p.m., there will be a general meeting in the Caxton Hall, with Cardinal Bourne in the Chair.—The Times, Sept. 29th.

Fads and Fashions.

A white crepe overblouse of manish lines uses a motif of colored beads at one side.

Very effective on a black velvet sleeve is a monochrome cuff of tiers of scalloped silver cloth.

Many evening gowns are compromising affairs, being quite short in front and quite long in back.

A large soft bow at one side is a popular trimming for the informal hat at the present moment.

Satin and lace combinations in frocks are well favored. Crepe dresses, however, are leading.

The blouse of a navy blue serge tunic is braided in plaid effect in tinsel and color galloon.

A three-piece costume of black satin material has its jacket trying at one side, just below the hip-line.

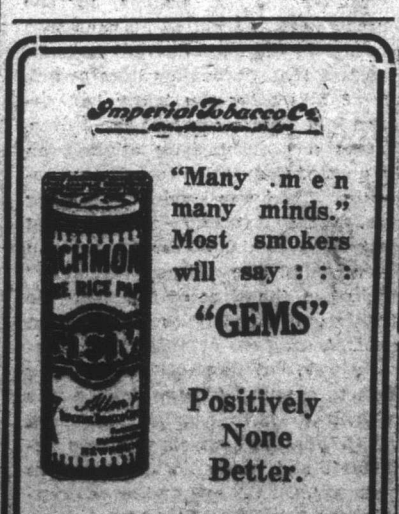

A street frock of black tulle has pleated insets in the sleeves to match the pleated panel at one side of the skirt.

Jackets of caracul fur are trimmed with fox, and among these furs, beige and platinum are the leading color. Drapery is tightly drawn about the hips and back, and caught at the center front where it falls in graceful folds.

A simple blouse of crepe de Chine features a one-sided use of the monogram, applied in duvetyn and embroidery.

MANAGING A HOME

Is Much the Same as Managing a Business.

Most men do not realize that their wives have quite a business to run. The housekeeper is on a par with a purchasing agent, and also she has to fill the offices of efficiency expert, commissariat, superintendent, and general manager. She has to know what to buy, where to buy, and when to buy; and in a good many cases, her business is run as well as any other.

Now then, Mrs. Business Woman, there is something new on the market that will enable you to run your home better than ever before.

Beaver Board is the Best of all Wall Boards

HERE IS THE PROOF:

On the outside of our Store there are two Beaver Boards which were placed there in 1912. These two Beaver Boards have been exposed to the rain, sun, wind and snow during the past ten years and are still in good condition.

No mere substitute has stood such a test as this.

During the past ten years seven substitutes for Beaver Board have been sold to take the place of Beaver Board, but to-day not one of these substitutes is seen, and Beaver Board holds its place as the best of all wall boards.

The back of every Beaver Board is branded with the Beaver trade mark

Look for this trade mark whenever you buy Beaver Board. Unless the board you buy as Beaver Board is branded with this trade mark, you are being cheated.

Beaver Board is guaranteed by the Beaver Companies of Thorolu and Buffalo and last as long as your house.

Beaver Board is real board made with long fibres of selected Spruce and necessarily will outwear such imitations as consist of several thicknesses of cardboard glued together.

Beaver Board is the best of all Wall Boards.

B.I.S. Grand Drawing.

The B.I.S. Grand Drawing will take place without fail the last week in October. It is felt advisable to postpone it to this date because of the difficulty in collecting in the stubs. Those holding stubs are advised to hand them in immediately to the Secretary in order that everything might be in readiness for the Drawing. It is suggested to those of the public, who have not as yet invested, to procure their tickets immediately, as there is only a limited supply on hand.

W. B. SKINNER, Secretary.
