RIDGETOWN YOUNG LIBERAL CLUE.

The meeting held in the Livingstone block, Ridgetown, Friday night, for the purpose of completing the organization of the above-named club was a success beyond the expectations of its most sanguine promoters. There was a splendid attendance of young and old Liberals, including the Hon. D. Mills, who was present at the urgent request of the promoters and the general wish of all interested. Short, pithy, business-like speeches were the order of the evening, and a motion that a Young Liberal Club be formed without any distinction as to age of members or disabilities on account of age, was unanimously carried with spplause. The following gentlemen—who all agreed on the advisability of the step—took part in the discussion, which was carried on in a friendly manner. James Grant, E. McKäy, H. T. Johnson (chairman), Mr. Bald, John Yoeom, A. F. McKinley, Dr. Stalker, Hon. D. Mills, J. G. Little, M. Tempkins, R. R. Lowthian and others. The following officers were unanimously chosen: Hon. D. Mills, J. G. Little, M. Tempkins, R. R. Lowthian and others. The following officers were unanimously chosen: Hon. D. Mills, J. G. Little, M. Tempkins, R. R. Bridgman, second vice-president; W. UNEXPECTED AID. Beauty in Distress Helped Out of Latin Slough by a Rough-Look-ing Youth.

A girl with soft brown hair and earnest A girl with soft brown hair and canneteyes sat in an electric car bound from Cambridge to Boston the other morning. In her lap lay several books, and in her hands she held a Latin copy of Horace's Satires, which she was studing diligently. At her side sat a young man who looked At her side sat a young man who looked steadily over her shoulder at her open book. The young man did not look like one who might understand Latin. He wore an immense pair of rubber boots, a rough overcoat much the worse for wear, and a dingy hat that was pulled far down over

Finally the girl came to a line that seemed to give her trouble. It was not difficult Latin. The construction was simple and direct, but it was one of those treacherous idioms that say one thing ar mean another, and hence appear altogethe incongruous in their context. The gi treamerous inclines that say one thing and mean another, and hence appear altogether incongruous in their context. The girl locked at the Latin in a puzzled way, and then turned to the notes in the back of the book. Then she consulted the vocabulary, and finally turned to the text again, and gazed at it meditatively.

The young man next to her, who was still locking over her shoulder, showed considerable uneasiness at her seemingly futile efforts. He smiled faintly, turned once or twice in his seat, and beat a tattoo on the floor with the toe of his rubber boot. And as her struggles continued his disquietude became still more apparent. He locked around the car in a helpless way, bit his lips and beat upon the floor more violently than ever.

Then suddenly he leaned slightly toward her and said: "And I agree to be a witness."

SON WHIPS FATHER.

The Old Man Had sbused His Wife, and the Young Man Defended Her.

New York, Dec. 11.—William M. Corwin, aged 29, is a traveling salesman owning property in Montelair and New Brunswick. His father, aged 55, is a real estate agent at 729 Broad street, Newark. While the young man was on a western trip recently his mother wrote to him that her husband had abused and then deserted her. Corwin wrote to his father and got no answer. He returned to Newark and found his mother marked by a black eye. She said that his father struck ner. He then went to his father's office to have a talk with him.

The elder Corwin called his wife a vilo name and William struck him with his fist. Then they grappled and went down on the floor. In the melee young Corwin bit his father's nose. He was arrested, and Justice Hayes yesterday sympathized so thoroughly with him that he allowed him to go on his promise to appear when wanted by the grand jury.

Young Corwin admitted all that was charged, in spite of the caution not to say anything which might criminate him. The Old Man Had Abused His Wife, and
