Mr. Gladstone, amid a storm of cheers, began his speech with reference to the criticisms made by the Unionist leaders on criticisms made by the Unionist leaders on the historical precedents he had cited on former occasions for home rule in Iroland. The Opposition, he said, had contended that in no other countries could analogies be found for changing the union between Great Britain and Iroland. Their contention could not be supported by historical facts. In Austria-Hungary, in Norway and Swedon, in the United States and in the British

In conclusion, Mr. Gladstonesaid: "We have faith in national liberty, faith in its efficacy as an instrument of national clucation. We believe that experience—widespread over the whole wast field—encourages us to our work at every point. Finally, we feel that the passing of this great measure after more than 80 days debate, will and must constitute the greatest among all steps hitherto provided towards the attainment of a certain and early triumph." Britain's Navy Criticised.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—In the House of Commons Mr. Edward T. Gourley, member for Sunderland, and a well-known shipbuilder, asked whother, since the sinking of the warship Victoria, the Government's attention had been directed to the criticism of experts at home and abroad as to cism of experts at home and abroad as to the utility of ships of monster size, and whether an inquiry would be made regarding the capability of the lower structure of such ships to prevent capsizing in the event of some of their] compartments filling with water. He also asked whether the Admiralty officials were aware that the lower structure of these ships when pierced might, as in the case of the Victoria, disturb the center of gravity and cause them to "turn turtle."

Right Hon. Sir U. J. Kay-Shuttleworth, Secretary to the Admiralty, replied that the Admiralty had not failed to consider the criticisms referred to, but was decidedly criticisms referred to, but was decidedly of the opinion that it would be advisable to build more ships of the dimensions already decided upon in view of the strength of shoes they might encounter in case of war. The Admiralty saw no reason for a special inquiry into the subject, as the question of the lower structure had necessarily been dealt with in designing the ships.

ships. r E. J. Reed, member for Cardiff, who was for a number of years chief constructor of the navy, declared that the disaster to the Victoria was just what had been anticiset victoria was just what had been anticipated in regard to this class of vessels for sears past. A ship with a large armored senter citadel and unarmored ends was bound to capsize if badly injured in the ends. How many more ships, he asked, would have to capsize before the Admiralty gare up the construction of such vessels? Owing to the requirements of these vessels, the space taken up by the men's quarters. the space taken up by the men's quarters, and so forth, it was impossible to provide them with reliable water-tight compart-

Right Hon. George J. Goschen, formerly Algar Hon. George J. Goschen, formerly, First Lord of the Admiralty, said he restricted the tendency shown by the Scoretary to the Admiralty to make light of the loss of the Victoria. In view of the opinion of experts that a like fate might overtake other vessels, afull and immediate luquiry into the construction of this class of warships was desirable.

Admiral Field said that the standard for the navy should be based upon the work.

that the navy had to do. This was not taken into consideration by the framers of the naval estimates. Ten more first-class ships were required, especially effective rams. A large sum of money had been spent upon vossels that looked like rams, but that did not deserve the name, and that could do no more execution than a man tilting against a stone wall with a thimble only in some.

In the course of a general reply the Secretary of the Admiralty said that a further inquiry in regard to the loss of the Victoria would be instituted if the Admiralty should consider it necessary.

When the navy estimates came up for consideration, the Right Hon. Lord Geo. Hamilton (Conservative), lately First Lord of the Admiralty, attacked the Government for neglecting to maintain the efficiency of the navy. He declared that unless a determined effort was made to construct new war ships England's supremacy on the seas would vanish within three unless a determined effort was made to construct new war ships England's supremacy on the seas would vanish within three years. Already the French and Russian battleships together reached a total of 25 against 22 effective British vessels of that class. France and Russia have ten battleships in course of construction, while Great Britain has only three. In first-class cruisers only was Great Britain slightly superior to France and Russia. He suggested that supplementary estimates be allowed for the purpose of pushing on the work of building new warships.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt held that the superiority of the British navy over the navies of other countries was never so great as now. He denied the accuracy of the figures presented by Lord George Hamilton. The Chancellor of the Exchequer concluded by declaring that the Government was fully alive to all its obligations and would maintain the naval superiority of Great Britain.

countries could analogies be found for changing the union between Great Britain and Ireland. Their contention could not be supported by historical facts. In Austria-Hungary, in Norway and Sweden, in the United States and in the British colonies were to be found abundant proofs that it was altogether desirable to separate local from imperial affairs. Throughout European and American literature it was not possible to find a writer entitled to consideration who approved of the conduct of England towards Ireland, or attempted to applogrise for the grievous and shameful history which since the union they had felt compelled to deplore.

One of the most extraordinary social evelations ever known in Brantford leaked revelations ever known in Brantford leaked out Tuesday morning, when it became known that Edward Vezzy and his wife, Violet Vezzy, residing on Marlborough street, were husband and wife and at the same time brother and sister. The poor woman, who is of a mest respectable family, is nearly heartbroken, while the man has suddenly left the city.

The facts of the case are briefly these: Violet Buckingham, a young woman of 21 years of age, was born in Ireland, and some years ago came to Canada and located permanently in London, Ont., where she some years ago came to Canada and located permanently in London, Ont., where she made her home with friends. A little more than eighteen months ago she was introduced to a young man named Edward Vezzy, who had shortly before arrived in the Forest City from New Zealand, and who had been a soldier in the Second Inniskillen Fusiliers stationed at Secunderabad

A MESSAGE TO GIRLS.

MESSAGE TO GIRLS.

Mr. Albert Dawson has been interviewing Mrs. Josephine Butler for the Young Woman. He asked her for a message for the girls of Great Britain, and this is it:

"The one thing I feel is their lack of dignity. The sense of their own worth should be impressed upon girls in all ranks of life. They are too cheap. They ought to remember that they are queens born, and that they must comport themselves as such. I always try to infuse into my nices the sense of their own great worth and dignity as their own great worth and dignity as women. Nothing can make woman worth-less. The sense of womanhood and the value of the individual ought never to be lost sight of. They should never be taught to look to marriage as a necessity. I would not discourage the romantic feeling, a girl's desire to nave someone all her own really to love—you can't expel that from the heart of a woman—but it must not be allowed to become morbid, and a woman ought to be able to live without it. The more indeable to live without it. The more independent young women are, the more will they be able to find real happiness in marriage." Mrs. Butler's own married life was an idyl all through, and at the end much more romantic and beautiful in every sense than at the beginning; and, if she has anything to impress on the world, it is the sublimity of that union at its best.
