One occasionally comes across paragraphs in the papers recounting some exceptional performance in the way of igh speed on the railway, somewhere high speed on the railway, somewhere or other, such, say, as:

"An engine on the Great North Midland line yesterday achieved the hitherto unheard-of feat running a mile in 3s see. This, which equals ninety-four and three-quarter miles an hour, is the highest railway speed yet recorded."

Paragraphs of this kind are served up now and again. The miblic reads them.

miles an hour—in a newspaper; on the rails, however, it is not so. In point of fact, no such speed as that mentioned in the above hypothetical paragraph has ever been satisfactorily attested, and, indeed one may say with relarable conindeed, one may say with tolerable cer-tainty that it has never been attained either in this country or any other on the globe.

About the middle of 1893 there were some rather tall stories sent across from the United States of speeds reached by engines hauling the fast trains between New York and Chicago. The tallest yarn of all claimed a mile in 32 sec. for engine No. 999 on the New York Central line, or, in other words a speed of 112.5 miles an hour. Later investigations have given no cause for

There are certain spots on our main lines, particularly those from London to the north, where express trains habitually run for miles together at speeds considerably over sixty miles an hour; such, for instance, as near Corby or Abbotts Ripton, on the Great Northern; Shap to Carlisle, on the North-Western; or near Ampthill and Harlington, on the Midland. The chief thing is a well-laid road, free from sharp curves, and with a few miles of easy gradient, and seventy miles an hour is obtained without much difficulty.

In all probability the highest authenticated speed is that timed comparatively recently on the Great Northern line.

Up to that the best record was that of a mile in 44 sec., or 81.8 miles an hour. This speed was several times

Henry A. King, Toronto: The adjournment of Congress is, of course, a favorable factor as far as speculation is concerned. London, however, continues to sell, and, although the undertone of the market is firm, this is a decisive factor in the situation. There was some support in both Def, and Sugar this afternoon; on the other hand General Electric was weak, a fact accounted for by the adverse decision in some important litigation. The relatively favorable earnings of St. Paul for last week of Feb. failed to arouse any enthusiasm. The continued strength of Exchange is another cause for misgiving.
