A Wave of Low Pricing Goes Over Cretonnes, Taffetas, Linens, Lace Curtains and Curtain Nets

PERFECT SEA of flower and foliage-covered fabrics, flanked by a foam of delicate curtain nets and lace curtains, makes the Drapery Department a veritable vision of freshness and brightness. And on every hand, calling attention to the wave of low pricing, are the green price tickets which denote special Sale values. Never before has the Department made preparations on such a gigantic scale for the February Sale of Furniture and House Furnishings, never before have its efforts been more successfully realized. Cretonnes, art taffetas, hand-blocked linens, portieres, window shades, lace curtains, curtains, scrims, and marquisettes are all to be obtained at prices far below their ordinary cost, and, for their better display, a series of room sections have been erected, suggesting the usefulness of the various materials. The following are but a few of the items included in the Sale :

Exhibition of Gowns Made From Ladies' Home Journal Patterns Displayed by Madame Brolaski on Living Models

O BE ABLE TO MAKE A DRESS which does not look home-made-this is surely the ambition of every woman who makes her own frocks, whether she makes them at home or at a school for dressmaking, and what would she not give for the secret ! In this exhibition, which will be held in the Dress Goods Department, she may not only see perfectly-fitting gowns, embodying the latest modes, all made from the Ladies' Home Journal patterns, but she may obtain many valuable hints from Madame Brolaski, who is a Fashion authority thoroughly well posted on the subject of dress and a member of the staff of that very up-todate paper, the "Criterion of Fashion."

Madame Brolaski will give general fashion talks, and her vast DERHAPS it was his visit to America that gave M. Poiret the idea of the cowboy collar, but whatever the origin, the popularity of the pictured blouse is assured, and New York has already succumbed to its manifold attractions. Carried out in white crepe de Chine, with the new deep Raglan sleeves, set-in with hemstitching, another noteworthy feature about this blouse, one which cannot be fully seen from the sketch-is the girdle. The chintz-patterned silk is set in to the back, its bib-like point reaching the point of the collar, and follows the line of the sleeves down to the waist, where it ends in a sash that can be fastened as in the sketch, or can be brought to the back and there held by a pearl slide. An elasticthreaded band round the waist ensures the keeping in place of this smart little garment. It can be obtained with collar, cuffs and girdle in tan and green, blue and green and purple and green, at $13.00.

A most fascinating model is the corslet blouse-evidently inspired by the corslet of the mailed knight of the Middle Ages. The plain front is finished by way of a collar, with a band which stands slightly away from the throat and is becomingly filled in with a lace frill, but the chief feature is the quaint cut of the sleeves with their deep bound armholes, laced with silk cord to the corslet, both back and front.

A charming example is carried out in soft white cotton crepe, embroidered with mauve and tan flowers, finished at the waist with a ribbon girdle in shot mauve and tan silk. A touch of the same silk appears on the three-quarter sleeves. This, as well as a similar confection in yellow and green, embroidered erepe with washing silk bands at neck and armholes and a green ribbon lace girdle, is $10.00. -Third Floor, Yonge St.
