

his services were duly appreciated. His habits were expensive, and, notwithstanding the years he had been on constant pay and high wages with me, I never could persuade him to lay by any thing. He accompanied me from China to Boston in the Alert, remained with me as a domestic about a year after, and then died at Roxbury, and is buried in the Roxbury cemetery.

END OF VOL. I.