Repress Revolution.

London, Monday, June 25.-An unand its progress through the regime of Count Witte, whom the writer severequestionably the Duma includes a the assembly its character, indeed, they are quite powerless to even give at the naval ports, the results in Parliaments reflect England and Geris not Russia that the Duma repre-sents, but the political layer of the "It may be mentioned that there manifest impress." Democrats, and Laborists. The former are trying to transform the Duma into a national convention on the model of that of the French revolution. He adds:

"For the gentlemen who compose the Labor party, the Duma is nothing more than a convenient center, where conspiracies can be hatched with impunity, and the working masses revolutionized. Their ultimate aim is a struggle for the purpose of subversion, to be followed by the erection of a proletarian republic on the ruins of the middle class edi-This wild beast was piloted by the Cadets to the voting booths, and led into the Duma chained and muzzled, as they fancled. Their intention was to get it to terrify the time, as at midnight and Friday would carry out their designs, but the beast is now throwing off its muzzle, and tomorrow or the day after, the Russian conventionals may feel the fists of the Labor party on their heads." Summing up these and other criticisms, the anonymous minister foretells the dissolution of the new Parliament. which, as the world believes, is now only postponed until the occasion is apparently safer. He says: "The first Russian Duma is an abortion. This fact is becoming more and more obvious, even to the Cadets. It is incapable of working, incapable of living; hence the dissolution of the Duma is merely a question of time, and probably no protracted time. Dissolution is indispensable, not so much because the provocative debates of the Duma are volutionizing the country more and more, as because the present composition of the chamber is discrediting the principle of national representation." Nevertheless the writer sees that autocracy is dead and says: "To return to bureaucratic absolutism is impossible. The tremendous difficulties of the present moment consist on the one hand in full recognition that it is absolutely necessary to renew the worn-SCANDRETT & PROUDFOOT, BARRIS-TERS, solicitors, etc. Money to loan. 98 Dundas street, London. endless epidemics of murder, pillage and rioting." Notwithstanding all this, the writer gives reason for regarding the present paroxysm as less acute than that of last autumn, and sees in the relatively improved situation sound enough basis for the arduous work confronting the Government, namely, to have for Russia's weal the principle of national representation in spite of the national representatives returned at the first election. He concludes: "It behooves the Government means of sincere words and unequivocal acts to enlist as fellowthough they are taken from among the deputies of that Duma which has so bitterly disappointed Russia's hope the sole condition being that they are opposed to unnatural alliances with revolution, and are unlikely to cherish fantastic notions and pursue chimerical schemes. Meanwhile the struggle against anarchy, against terror and against murderers and plunderers is carried on perseveringly and pitilessly irrespective of the hypocritical supplications for amnesty, pardons, and the abolition of capital purlishment."
