Mr. Merritt remarked that while he might be looked upon as the dean of the association yet it had its compensations. He was given this great pleasure and opportunity by virtue of being the senior member. While he regretted he rejoiced in the knowledge that Mr. Cannell would be a success in his new field and he would follow his advance ment with keen interest, as would every member and other numerous Mr. Merritt then read the address,

REPLIES TO SENTIMENTS Mr. Cannell, in making his acknowledgement, said he could not adequately express his feelings, but he wished the members to believe him when he stated any work it had been his pleasure to transact for the association had not been a sacrifice on his part, as he had enjoyed the hearty co-operation of all and in this manner the duties of his office had been greatly relieved of responsibilities, etc. He regretted leaving his many friends in New Brunswick, and would look back with kindly feelings on this occasion. He thanked the members for their attendance to wish him Godspeed, and for their good feelings of fellowship, as

The Goose that Laid Gold Eggs

We all know the oldtime fable of the man who found himself master of a goose that laid eggs of gold. He got impatient, felt he wasn't getting rich quick enough, decided to boom business still more. If the eggs brought such a price, thought he, what must the goose itself bring? So he killed the goose that laid the golden eggs-only to be paid its value merely as meat

Most every store manager keeps before him warnings like this. He learns the shortsighted folly of high pressure methods in selling and advertising. He learns in the long run that plain truth is pure gold; and not to make a goose of himself by offering the public "anything else but."

If a firm of such reputation as J. Marcus, Ltd., made extravagant claims in their advertising-the public would take their word for it and crowd their store. But a day of reckoning would come. And if the visitors were given high pressure persuasion that the goods were reduced below the true facts, why the public would buy and buy quick. Simply because J. Marcus, Ltd., said so through their salesman. But, give it time, and the truth will

This firm takes pleasure in contributing this space as a reminder to public and merchants alike, in the furniture trade and all lines, of the value of truth in both advertising and selling. 'Tis better by far to keep on selling the truth that is gold than to trade falsely on the good name which while alive is beyond price but when killed is lost forever.
