H. T. GAGNIER IS DEAD IN TORONTO

Owner of Saturday Night
Passes Away in Hospital
—Sketch of His Career.

(Toronto Globe)

H. T. Gagnier, president and manager of H. Gagnier, Ltd., and publisher of Saturday Night, died on Sunday afternoon in Wellfleet Hospital. Mr. Gagnier had been ill for some nine months.

Mr. Gagnier, who was of French Huguenot stock, was born in Toronto about 40 years ago. His grandparents had lived in Louisiana, and his father, Edward Gagnier, was actively engaged in the tobacco business.

In his early days Mr. Gagnier was himself interested in the tobacco industry, and it was that fact, indirectly, which was the foundation for his success in the sphere in which he made his name and fortune, for a little paper called The Cigar and Tobacco Journal was his first venture in the publishing business. He was considered in those days an expert on all phases of the tobacco market, was secretary of the Cigar and Tobacco Association, and had a good deal to do with the legislation which was passed at that time. He was a frequent visitor to Ottawa in connection with the troubles of the tobacco men, and a very notable incident in his life was his settlement of a strike in Montreal. The manufacturers could not agree among themselves and it was a high tribute to their faith in the judgment and fairness of Mr. Gagnier that, although suspicious of one another, they placed themselves unreservedly in his hands and in the course of a month he had straightened out the entire situation and settled the dispute. It was considered a remarkable piece of work for a young man.

It was 20 years ago that Mr. Gagnier laid the foundation of his remarkable career in the publishing world by the inauguration of The Cigar and Tobacco Journal. It was a success from the start, and shortly afterward he started The Wine and Spirit Journal, which continued to thrive until Prohibition rendered its further publication useless.

Early in 1908 Mr. Gagnier purchased Saturday Night from E. E. Sheppard. This was the actual beginning of his success as a publisher. Although Saturday Night at the time it changed hands had a considerable clientele in the city its influence was small compared with that which it exercised from the time Mr. Gagnier took over control. He at once enlarged the publication and introduced new features, securing for the purpose the best of literary talent available.

Other publications which he subsequently either bought or founded were: The Trader, The Motor Magazine (purchased from W. J. Taylor of Woodstock), The Clothier and Haberdasher, The Canadian Motor Cycle (now defunct), The Dental Journal, Construction, The Architectural Journal, The Motor Trade, Women's Wear, and The Canadian Optometrist. The Canadian Farmer was another recent acquisition by Mr. Gagnier.

He founded the Consolidated Advertising Agency, and a job printing business which he established about five years ago in a small way has rapidly grown into a concern of considerable magnitude.

Mr. Gagnier's business was originally conducted in the old Saturday Night Building on Adelaide street, but in 1912 he erected the present Graphic Arts Building on Richmond street, where all branches of the business are conducted. In 1920 he acquired a large building at the rear to meet the growing demands of the firm.

Of a retiring disposition, Mr. Gagnier, though in the publishing business, disliked publicity in regard to himself. Although he had a large number of warm friends in private life, he never put himself forward in any way, and avoided meetings of a public character. He was greatly beloved by his employees. He was generous in his private benevolence and was a director of and took a warm interest in the Queen Mary Hospital for Consumptive Children, Weston.

He was a keen motorist, was the owner and drove one of the first cars seen on the streets of Toronto, and was a director of the Ontario

3 Day Sale Of Persian Lamb $80 Discount

For three short days Eighty Dollars comes off the cost of the finest Persian Lamb money can buy. There are but six coats in all—Six Skunk trimmed Lambs of such rare color, curl and firmness, their quality can be discerned farther off than any other.

And Black fur is the height of the fashion. At once there's harmony and contrast in the large Black Skunk Collar of the favorite shawl wrap, and the flared bell cuffs, standing out in enticing bushiness against the shony curls. Their forty inch length may be draped any one of three ways with a pull through, all-round, belt, in the same medium curl with crocheted buttons, or a silk girdle may be preferred. Both pockets are slashed and the lining is of the best Swiss brocade silk.

For three days only these $400 Coats sell for $320.
