HIS CURIOSITY LED TO

Several persons had a narrow escape from death last night when an iron manhole cover about three feet in diamater at the corner of Main street and Long Wharf was hurled forty feet or more in the air by a gas explosion.

When I sat out for the House of Commons. I received eight or ten top-hats from good-hearted people in the country afterwards, and several people sent me after a the corner of Main street and clothes sent for more given to the children and had them conveyed to a charitable institution.

Another instance was one of a little girl who refused to remain at home or clothes."

Campbell found that the parent was not more in the air by a gas explosion, smashing telephone and electric wires running across the street overhead.

Joseph Dixon of the North End, was standing on the manhole just a few seconds before the cover was lifted in-to the air. A rumbling noise under-ground caused him to step aside just in time. Three other manhole covers along Main street were also blown in-to the air, all on account of a foolhardy trick of a young man who touched a match to the air hole in the manhole bell in such a role. The fact is, she is rather a slight looking person of medium height, and the embodiment of kindness and gentleness. In this lies her secret of success.

The majority have but a vague idea of the duties of a police-woman. At the time of Miss Campbell's appointment, some went so far astray as to conjecture the outcome of an attempted arrest on her part of an intoxicated man, or other rebellious characters. With the exception of children, Miss Campbell deals only with girls and women. Her work is chiefly in the preventative line. She does not aim to see how many errors.

was much enthusiasm and discussion throughout the city over the proposed appointment of one or two women constables in the capital. Opinions were expressed, varying widely, and finally, in August, Miss Flora Campbell was sworn in as police constable.

Miss Campbell was well acquainted with the style of work in her future field of endeavor, having been connected with the Travelerrs' Aid Society for a considerable length of time. She is Ottawa's only police-woman.

She wears neither uniform nor visible badge of authority. She has full power to make arrests, but seldom does so. She is not the powerful six-foot type in build, nor even the "militant" type. No one could imagine Miss Campbell.

Daily Routine.

At nine o'clock in the morning our police-woman is ready for duty. She looks at the sheet to see if there are any women's cases. Should there be any, she proceeds to the Juvenile Court room. Here the women wait until the men's court is concluded. 'I do not appear in court probably more than once or twice a week," Miss Campbell stated. "I go in mainly so that the women or girls will not feel alone. Of course I have to lay the charges."

When young girls appear for the first time, and are dismissed, if the charge is not too serious, Miss Campbell finds employment for them. The others she conducts to the cells, and takes care of in a general manner.

Of course there is the individual work, all of which is connected with the morality department. But on the whole the police-woman's duties are very indefinite. Once the formalities of the morning are over, she looks up her occurrence book. This contains records of any cases that have been heard of in different parts of the city.
