A STIRRING APPEAL FROM THE TRENCHES

One of Our Soldiers Writes Pointedly to the Young Men at Home—General Alderson's Tribute—Other Letters of Interest.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Ferguson, of Sunny Brae, have received a letter from their son, Frank G. Ferguson, who was wounded in the recent terrible Ypres battle, and is now in a hospital in France. In his letter the Moncton boy informs his parents that as a result of his wounds he has lost the use of one eye, part of his cheek and chin, but says he is recovering nicely.

A Stirring Appeal.

One of the most stirring appeals for recruits comes from Sapper William R. Y. McLeod, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. McLeod, of Fredericton, who is with the 1st Canadian Engineers in Flanders. He writes:

"Instead of worrying about me you should be proud to think I am here. I should not return you should be still prouder. That is the true British spirit. Why, we have fellows here who have lost brothers, cousins and even sons. You do not notice any tears, but rather a more determined effort to avenge their deaths. If I had a son and old enough to enlist I would disown him if he was cowardly enough to stay at home. I would not be quite so pessimistic regarding the duration of the war as you are, I agree with you that the war is just starting, but you want to remember that we did very little fighting during the winter and we all knew that it would not add until late in the spring. I am still counting on getting home by Christmas if all goes well. Of course we have a lot of fighting to go through before then. Things look very good just now and we have certainly got on the move."

General Alderson's Tribute.

"While I write this our guns are banging away incessantly not far from where I am. The Engineers were addressed by Gen. Alderson after the battle of Ypres, and he certainly spoke nicely. While he spoke about those who had been killed we bared our heads, and he said whatever their past life had been he was certain that the Almighty would overlook all their misdeeds and take them to their reward. He went on to say that he never felt prouder in his life than at the present time at the head of so gallant and determined a body of men. He recalled a former aide who addressed us that he made a statement that the Canadians would show their mettle, also saying that it would go down in the annals of history the saying 'Canadians will never budge.'"

"I would obtain the recruits in England was through young girls. Why, if a fellow did not enlist there he was as much as ostracized from all society and made to feel that if he was walking along a street in civilian clothes, I do not boast of being a hero and certainly will admit that I do not like shells and bullets whizzing around my head, but I do not care. I am here and I should I return I will not have to sneak away when others are talking about the war, but will be able to talk along with the rest."

In Good Health.

A letter received yesterday by Mrs. H. Weatherhead, 278 Wentworth street, from her brother-in-law, Bombardier Arthur T. Weatherhead, who is in the front, for he says "I saw in the Times-Star, that quite a few of my chums have been wounded."

Bombardier Weatherhead speaks briefly of conditions in France, and concludes with the intimation that those at home must move of the war that is in the front, for he says "I saw in the Times-Star, that quite a few of my chums have been wounded."

4th Battery, 1st Brigade, Divisional Artillery, 1st Can Contingent, France.

Dear Mr.—

Long before this note reaches you the announcement of Gordon V. Boone's death will have been published. Many times before his death he wrote to you, his sudden death gave me, as well as the rest of the battery, a terrible shock, for he made many true and fast friends here as well as at home. He and I started together, and have shared ration every since, and as in our old Mt. Allison days he was a pal faithful and true. He died as he would have wished to die at the helm in action. You can understand from the newspaper descriptions how he was killed, and how he died, and one afternoon, 27th April, we were firing heavily, supporting an attack, when the German heavy artillery opened an accurate fire of poison fumed high explosive shells. Dick was in the open shifting the trail, when he was struck in the stomach with a large fragment, a small piece also striking him in the forehead. He stood up straight and beckoned to me, and then he died. He went unconscious and died in three minutes. We buried him the same afternoon in a place that I cannot describe now. Major Beattie, a young chaplain, read the burial service, and he said: "It will please you to know that several of his Masonic brethren were there and paid him full honor."

A soldier does not carry much, but I have all his personal effects. His kit, including extra clothing, etc., was distributed to the fellows. His Masonic ring, I believe he wanted his brother to have. He carried a watch, a compass, pocket-book, belt, knife and some badges. I believe that Dick had a sister. Perhaps she would like some of his things. I am carrying them all. When we retire from here I will forward the ring to you.

I trust this note will be satisfactory to you. You might drop me a line and let me know if there is anything else that I can do.

Sincerely yours, CORP. C. G. MACDOUGALL.

From Capt. Corbet.

Interesting letters have also been received from George W. Boone, of this city, now at the front, and Capt. (Dr.) G. G. Corbet, who is attached to the 1st Artillery Brigade. He says:
