and facade; there where the roofs were brownest and oldest, where the cathedral rises its Gothic towers and the old university, with its red roof and grassed courtyard, stands I spent a most delightful hour of historical research and meditation, on the fine terrace gazing out over the lake to the mountains of Savoy beyond.
The next morning I did really start work and have now written twenty four sheets - or about half - of my article, and I shall hope to finish it by Sunday next, and send it to Grove, to London, who will look through it for me. Besides this I am attending some lectures at the University here, and find them with interesting and good practice for my
