

all the other provincial premiers and ministers, I have to be scrupulously independent.

I am glad the people are beginning to find out what our Government's wasteful extravagance in an attempt to carry out some of Bennett's promises is costing them. It is only when they find out they have to pay more on the necessities of life that they will appreciate the kind of thing I was standing for when I refused to yield to pressure prior to the last general election. I am perfectly certain that, had the Liberal party been returned, our treasury would have been saved more than a hundred million dollars in the time that has elapsed since the last general election.

If it is possible for you to meet Mr. Dabuo and his daughter, I hope you will not fail to do so. Mr. Dabuo is one of the finest men we have in the House of Commons, and you will like both him and his daughter. He lost his wife a short time ago. They have all been at Laurier House, and would, I am sure, be glad to meet you. I would not like myself to ask any favour of Mr. Dabuo, but, should he have openings at any time, I imagine he is just the sort of person who would be
