

his name before several hundred people for a mere trifle.

The anger of the gods seems to have alighted with redoubled force upon the head of that notorious individual, Samuel Greer. Nothing daunted by his failure to convince the dispensers of justice by the righteousness of his claims in the civil courts, he undertook to use the American argument upon the sheriff when the latter came with the usual blue paper invitation to Samuel to vacate. The result under the British flag was not doubtful, viz., trial, conviction and a sentence not, I think, out of proportion to the offence. Samuel has once more assailed the courts through the medium of a writ of error, but to his disgust the court hath found no error, except that Sam should have been serving his sentence, and which error was ordered to be rectified by the immediate restoration of Sam to the hospitalities of the New Westminster public workshop.
