

BATTLE AGAIN REVEALED BY HOME RULE BILL

Premier Intimates Lack of Agreement on Measure--Redmond is Censorious and Finds Fault With Mr. Asquith's Previous Announcement

London, July 25.—A significant remark was made in the House of Commons this evening by Premier Asquith at the conclusion of a debate on a motion for adjournment made by John Redmond, the Nationalist leader, following an announcement by the Premier that the Government had no intention of introducing any home rule for Ireland bill with regard to which there was no substantial agreement among all parties. In appealing to the Nationalists not to throw away the opportunity for bringing home rule into immediate operation, Mr. Asquith said:

I ask the House, and will ask the country if necessary, if the Government's proposals are not fair.

London, July 25.—Confirming publicly to-day the suspicion that the Cabinet had been unable to reach a decision in regard to the home rule amending bill, Premier Asquith in the House of Commons to-day announced that the Government would not introduce any bill with regard to which there was no substantial agreement among all parties. This was taken in the lobbies of Parliament to mean that some rule had been dropped for the moment and that David Lloyd George's negotiations had come to naught.

The stumbling block appears to have been the retention in the Imperial Parliament of Nationalist representation in undiminished numbers.

Redmond Moves Adjournment

John Redmond, leader of the Nationalists, moved an adjournment of the House to discuss the Premier's reply, and a lively debate when the regular business of the House of Commons concluded was anticipated.

Premier Asquith pointed out that the agreement was subject to the approval of and revision by the Cabinet. Two main points, he said, had emerged from the agreement, and these had been accepted by both sections of the Cabinet, the Unionists and Home Rulers. The Unionists, the Premier said, influenced very largely by the attitude of Mr. Redmond and his friends during the war, had agreed that the home rule should be brought into immediate application, while the Home Rulers had agreed that the six Ulster counties should be brought in without their consent.

Mr. Redmond repudiated the interpretation placed upon the agreement by Premier Asquith and asked whether it was not a fact that on Saturday last War Secretary Lloyd George and Herbert L. Samuel, home secretary, had sent him a message saying that a decision had been reached by the government on the two points mentioned.

Mr. Asquith's Statement.

Premier Asquith repeated that the government would not introduce any bill until it was satisfied that it met substantially with the assent of all parties.

Premier Asquith continued: "In the course of settling upon a bill to give effect to this object two questions arose which required consideration; first as to the form in which the exclusion of the Ulster counties should be provided for. It was common ground to all parties that this area should not be subject to automatic inclusion and that it would not do more than to make that sure."

"The other question was the retention after home rule of the members in the Imperial Parliament in undiminished numbers. After final and full examination of the question the government felt that they could not themselves agree, and could not expect the House of Commons to agree that the full number should be retained after an election. The government had no intention of introducing any home rule bill with regard to which there was no substantial agreement among all parties."

Not Attacking Anybody.

The discussion of Mr. Redmond's motion to adjourn the House of Commons in order to call attention to the rapidly growing feeling of unrest in Ireland and the deplorable effect on the Irish situation, which must result from the government not proposing to carry out in their entirety the terms offered by it for a settlement of the Irish difficulty, as accepted by the Irish parties, began with a speech by Mr. Redmond.

The Irish Nationalist leader declared he did not want to attack anybody, but merely to state the facts, which, he said, spoke for themselves. He said that when two months ago Premier Asquith had returned from Ireland and announced that the present system of government had broken down, he had said:

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. It is a disease of constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. The only cure is Catarrh Cure. It is a powerful medicine, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces. It is a powerful medicine, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces. It is a powerful medicine, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces.

on down, and said the cabinet had unanimously requested Mr. Lloyd George to bring about, if possible, a provisional settlement of the Irish question by the consent of every one concerned, he was thrilled by the hope that the interests not only of Ireland but of the Empire the Irish question might be put out of the way until the war had ended.

A Provisional Settlement.

The proposals Mr. Lloyd George put before Sir Edward Carson and himself, Mr. Redmond were in no sense their proposals, but after considerable negotiations and many changes they agreed to recommend unless they were put forward as a purely temporary settlement for the period of the war.

Mr. Redmond said the agreement was for the provisional settlement of the question until the war was over, or until a final and permanent settlement was arrived at within a limited time after the war. The first words proposed were that the whole bill should remain in force during the continuance of the war, and for a twelve-month afterwards, but Sir Edward Carson objected that if parliament took no action during the twelve months after the war, then the six Ulster counties should be excluded from the operations of the home rule act of 1914. To meet the objection Mr. Redmond said the following words were added: "But if parliament has not by that time made further and permanent provisions for the government of Ireland the period for which this bill shall remain in force is to be extended by order of the Council for such time as is necessary to enable parliament to make such provisions."

"I was informed," declared the Nationalist leader, "that these words would be incorporated in the agreement. Another amendment which I proposed was that during the transitory period the number of Irish members of the Imperial Parliament was to remain as at present and this was regarded as an indispensable factor of the temporary character of the whole arrangement."

"Having attained the consent of our supporters to this agreement, I was faced on my return to London by an entirely new proposal from the Marquis of Lansdown, which was a bolt from the blue. Lord Lansdown, in a speech in the House of Lords, declared the bill to be introduced would contain certain modifications of the act of 1914 which would be permanent and enduring, and I protested."

"Saturday last Mr. Lloyd George and the Home Secretary in my presence the Cabinet had decided to insert in the bill two provisions: one for the permanent exclusion of the Ulster counties, and another cutting out of the bill the agreement for the retention of the Irish members at Westminster during the transitory period. This decision was declared to be absolute and final."

Wants No Breach of Faith.

"I stand by every word in the agreement we came to. I will not agree to any new proposals, which would mean an absolute and disgraceful breach of faith on my part towards my supporters in Ireland. I want the Government to search for a way to introduce a bill on the lines indicated we will oppose it at every stage."

Mr. Redmond concluded by declaring that while the attitude of himself and his friends toward the war was unaltered and unalterable, the Nationalists hold themselves free to exercise their individual judgment in criticizing the government's vacillation, not only in the conduct of domestic affairs, but in the conduct of the war.

Secretary of War Lloyd George frankly admitted that what Mr. Redmond said was true, except in one or two points. One of these, he said, was the phraseology concerning the exclusion of Ulster. Mr. Redmond interrupted by saying that the form of the words had been carefully considered and had been drafted by skilled lawyers and approved by Sir Edward Carson.

Secretary of War Lloyd George emphasized the difficulty in embodying heads of agreement in a bill, and insisted it was only a question of phraseology. He confessed that a departure had been made in the matter of the Irish representation in the House of Commons, because the Unionist members of the Cabinet found it impossible to secure the assent of the Ulster members of the House of Commons to an undiminished Irish representation after a general election and after home rule had been set up in Ireland.

The proposal, he said, therefore, was modified as follows: "Until dissolution Irish members of Parliament remain undiminished, afterwards the provisions of the home rule act should become operative, but the Irish members should be summoned in undiminished numbers whenever Parliament considers the final settlement."

Opposes Immediate Operation.

The Government, declared Secretary of War Lloyd George, was faced with the fact that an agreement could not be put through without the modifications he mentioned. He understood Irish members would resist any attempt to force the bill with these modifications. This remark called forth loud cheering from the Irish members.

Continuing, Mr. Lloyd George said that if that was the Irish view it would be idle for the Government to introduce a bill bringing home rule into immediate operation under any conditions, and he regretted it deeply and thought that it was a disaster. He still believed a high-spirited and courageous race could only be governed with their consent, and the Government certainly would not force this proposal on them.

What Carson Wants.

Sir Edward Carson said that when he went into negotiations he thought only of what was best to help win the war, compared with which home rule or anything else mattered little. He would have never touched the negotiations except as a war measure, and had made it perfectly clear from the beginning that the six Ulster counties must be struck definitely out of the home rule act. He was not asking, however, for permanent exclusion, Sir Edward added. No settlement made by this Parliament could be permanent. He stood by the agreement made by this Parliament could not be included without a bill.

Concluding, Sir Edward appealed to the Nationalist members not to let the good that had come out of the negotiations.

"It would not be a bad day for this country, for the Ireland and for the world, if Mr. Redmond and myself should shake hands on the floor of this House. (Loud cheering.) But if that is to be done there are Ulster ideas of opinion of the bill. Then go on and win her if you can; she can be won by good government. If the hopes of a settlement in Ulster and Ireland are shattered now it would be a calamity."

"At the end of the war we will have had enough fighting. We will have other great questions to deal with, and it is inconceivable that we should resume our old quarrels."

"Fortunately for England and for Ireland, the partition of the island is dead and damned. Millions of the Irish race will rejoice with all their hearts to-morrow over its death."

THE FAIRY ROPE

I've told you how Marta's stepmother and her ugly daughters threw Marta into the bog and King Night saved her.

"Next time," said the wicked stepmother, "we'll throw her into the swamp by day. Then we can see where its soggiest. She'll sink to the very bottom of the marsh and never return."

So one day when the sun was bright they dragged Marta along the bog for the darkest, dampest bit of bog and when they found it they dropped her headlong into it!

Down, down, down she went to the bottom of the bog. It hadn't been long when she found the sun-dew fairies.

"Who were the sun-dew fairies? Well, you ought to know. You must know, for the sun-dew fairies saved Marta."

Now the sun-dew fairies lived in the small, white blossoms of the sun-dew plant, which as wise men know grows always in a bog. And on each plant were queer knobs full of sticky fluid. The sun-dew fairies in terrible excitement drew the fluid out into threads. Like fairy gum it was and they spun it into fairy ropes. Then they lowered the ropes down, down, down into the swamp and saved Marta.

Up, up, up, the sun-dew fairies

The poor brute lay on the road unable to move, howling piteously, but the man drove on without even stopping to see what were the injuries. If his name could have been found out a complaint would have been lodged against him.
