The Appetite

May be increased. The Digestive organs strengthened, and the bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition.
They contain neither opium nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted my family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief.
I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and in a short time my digestion and appetite

IMPROVED

my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches and dizziness, and I became strong and well.—Darius
M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

Loss of Appetite, and General Debility.
I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored.
—C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered stomach and liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philly Lockwood, Topsham, Mass.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hen-neberry, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me a restored vigor, and restored my health.—
John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

Selected Literature.

BROTHER SAM.

"Once on a time," we'll say, for so
The stories all begin.

There lived a maiden good and true
Who stood, as maidens are apt to do, Upon her rights in dealing with Her friends or next of kin.

Near by her elder brother dwelt,
And positive I am,
You'd travel very far to find A man of larger heart and mind,
Or longer limb and bank account Than this big brother Sam.

The maid was fair to look upon,
Though rivals called her stout,
She loved her brother very well,
But still, I deeply grieve to tell,
About a very foolish thing
They had a falling out.

'Twas this way, as perhaps you've heard,
Their mother was a queen,
Who gave her child a deal of land,
With rivers, lakes and mountains grand,
Coast waters, gulfs and bays,
And wouldn't consent to part
Besides much fish that swam unseen.

The brother was a self-made man,
In several Glens he'd found his way,
For he had many years before,
Gone out and slummed the palace door,
Defied his mother, gone to work,
And earned his own estate.

Now he was rich in gold and lands,
And all that heart could wish,
Coast waters that could not be beat,
And yet the fellow longed to eat,
And wouldn't consent to part
Besides much fish that swam unseen.

When she heard his heart was set Upon this special dish,
She straightway told him she would sell,
And named her price and waited, well—
Some little time, I ween, and yet He didn't buy the fish.

He said he wouldn't pay a cent,
For halibut and clam,
For codfish, mackerel or pike,
For lobster, herring or the like,
For fish to boil, or bake, or fry,
Oh, naughty brother Sam!

He guessed a girl nineteen years old
Would hardly dare resist, If one so great and strong as he,
With all his wealth by land and sea,
In fact her elder brother, too,
Should not on the gift insist.

Indeed, he thought he'd help himself,
And so he sent his men,
In several Glens he'd found his way,
For lobster, herring or the like,
With nets, and lines, and olden canes,
And hauled them in no small amount
When they came back again.

The maid was quite prepared for them,
Though strange perhaps, 'tis true,
As, one by one, his boats were hauled,
The maiden made it very plain,
Lest he should make so great a noise,
She meant to have her due.

Quiet, but firm, she stood her ground,
And let him have his way;
It was a most amusing sight
To see him bluster, want to fight,
And how he would be even yet
With her, a girl, nineteen.

News always travels with the wind,
This reached her mother's ear,
Who told her not a word to say,
Though all her fish he took away,
Lest he should make so great a noise,
That all the world should hear.

Make all concession possible
And let him have his way;
He always was so troublesome,
From little words to blows he'd come,
You see I had experience,
And know whereof I say.

But still the sister held her own Against her brother's will,
Poor brother Sam hung down his head As he dropped two dimes and ten pennies into the side pocket. "I reckon it goes hard to do this sort of thing every day,
but I have made up my mind to do it,
and no one has ever accused Jack Avery
of shirking. I feel sure that the result will prove satisfactory."

The afternoon was hot and sultry,
and Jack leaned over his desk the long columns of figures before him seemed to laugh at his unsuccessful efforts to balance accounts.

"Get one of Burt's fine cigars. You'll feel like a new man after you've had a good smoke," whispered the Evil Genius.

"Don't do it," Jack whispered and other voice. "One cigar will not suffice; you'll want another directly. If you break your resolution you will despise yourself for being so weak."

"My throat feels parched. Oh! for a glass of Burt's cool, sparkling beer," murmured Jack. At this moment the door opened and a voice called out—

"Here's yer ice-cold lemonade, two cents a glass!"

"I'll take a glass if it's the pure stuff," said Jack.

"I'll warrant it; mother and meself makes it, an' it takes it round to the gentlemen in the office," said the boy, filling a glass and handing it to Jack.

"Not so bad," said the latter, as he quenched the cooling draught. "If I had some over to Burt's," he muttered, "I would not have stopped at one glass of beer. That lemonade has freshened me up wonderfully." Eighteen cents found land's shoulder. "You are not obliged to give up smoking, and I must admit that a cold lunch would be likely to cause dyspepsia. You shall do as you think best, dear, and instead of advising you to practice economy, I will see what I can do toward lessening the family expenses."

"Of course, you must not do without things that are really necessary," said Jack, considerably mollified. "In fact," he continued, "I want you to feel that you are at liberty to do exactly as you please with every dollar that I give you."

"I understand you perfectly, Jack, I will not be at all backward about spending money for what we really need," said Bess with a smile.

"We will talk the matter over again, little one." And Jack, evidently glad that the matter was set aside for future consideration, kissed his wife affectionately, and walked briskly up the street toward his office.

As he approached the store where he was in the habit of buying his daily supply of cigars, he slackened his gait, and muttered:

"I've half a mind to do without cigars for a day. Let-me-see—that will be thirty cents saved. Ell do it!" Jack immediately quickened his pace, and passed the door. "The first time in two years that I have passed that store without going in," said Jack, as he deposited three silver dimes in his vest-pocket. "If each penny turns out to be a real, thirty cents ought to bring out a pretty good crop at the end of the year."

As the hours passed away, Jack was conscious of feeling very disconsolate without his accustomed cigar.

"I'll have a good, square meal to make up for it," he muttered, on his way to a neighboring restaurant.

Upon his arrival, he seated himself at a small table, and picking up a bill of fare, glanced over the list of culinary successes and failures named thereon. Jack hesi-tated a moment, then, turning to the waiter, who stood at a respectful distance, he said:

"Simmons, bring me a bowl of vegetable soup, a few slices of bread, and a saucer of rice pudding."

"All right, sah. Wonder what's come over Massa Avery; I reckon de tip-top diners am provin' too much for his digestion," he muttered, with a grin, as he delivered the order.

"Who would have thought that I could enjoy anything like this?" said Jack to himself, as he swallowed the last spoonful of pudding. On his way out of the restaurant he placed fifty cents upon the cashier's desk, and received thirty cents change.

"Here, you go to keep the cigar money from getting home sick," said Jack, as he dropped the amount into the side pocket.

On the way back to the office he met a friend. He was on the point of accompanying his salutation with the words,
"Come into Burt's and have something to drink," when a voice seemed to whisper—

"Stop, Jack! You can't afford to spend thirty cents for fancy drinks."

"Come, old fellow, what will you have?" asked the friend, as he turned to enter Burt's saloon.

"Not anything, thank you, I've sworn off," replied Jack, laughing.

"Ah, I see! you are a Benedict now.
Well, I won't urge you—in fact, I've about made up my mind that the 'strict' custom has hurried more than one man to destruction. Suppose you join hands in the resolute never to touch intoxicating liquor ourselves or invite any one to do the same?"

"I am with you there, Harvey," exclaimed Jack, grasping the hand of his friend and shaking it heartily. "Come up to the house some evening," he said, as they parted, "Bess will be very glad to see you."

"Thanks, I shall certainly do so—some evening."

"Bess has always been opposed to strong drink; wonder what she would say if she knew of my resolve," said Jack as he slipped two dimes and ten pennies
into the side pocket. "I reckon it
goes hard to do this sort of thing every day,
but I have made up my mind to do it,
and no one has ever accused Jack Avery
will prove satisfactory."

The afternoon was hot and sultry,
and Jack leaned over his desk the long
columns of figures before him seemed to
