Guelph Evening Mercury

OFFICE MACDONNELL STREET.

WEDNESDAY EVE'G, NOVEMBER 21.

NAPOLEON'S SPEECH.

The Senate and Corps Legislatif of France, met on the 18th inst., and the Emperor was pleased to address them. There is but little in the speech that we were not aware of before, and what little we did not know we might easily have guessed. Like the King of Prussia before the Reichstag the other day, the Emperor endeavored with much earnestness to convince his auditory and the world, that the olive of peace was blooming on the soil of France, and there was no cause to apprehend that it would soon wither, or give place to the laurels of war. He admits in the very outset, and gives it as one of his reasons for having called Parliament together somewhat earlier than usual, "that a vague inquietude has arisen to affect the public mind of Europe, and restrict the movements of industry and commercial transactions in all quarters," and all this notwithstanding that the Universal Exhibition "has shone, not only with a momentary brilliancy, but has destroyed the barriers between the different peoples, as well as the different classes of international hatreds," and notwithstanding, moreover, the pacific declarations of both France and Prussia. The Emperor is at a loss to comprehend why people should imagine on such slight grounds as they can now take hold of as the base of their belief, that war is impending. But we doubt very much if even the strong assurances of Napoleon will have the effect of changing the prevalent impression, for it is evident from the tone of the address, that while he would wish to allay any popular agitation which the knowledge of an approaching war might produce, he also wishes to add to the strength of his present effective military force. His Government, he says, will propose some simple modifications in virtue of which the strength of the army can be reduced during peace, and increased in the event of war, for it is a patriotic idea, that the stronger a nation is the better assured are its prospects of undisturbed tranquility. And so the Emperor designs that the inhabitants of France shall be comforted, and their ardour restrained by an old maxim, while he orders the manufacture of some thousands of Chassepot rifles, makes experiments with terribly destructive cannon, and probably on the Prussian model, drills every Frenchman who has attained a certain age.

His Majesty touches the Italian question briefly and lightly, and tells, almost ruefully, one would imagine, that peace for a moment seemed in danger, by reason of a revolutionary agitation which threatened the Papal States, whither he had been compelled to send troops. He was happy to announce that the spirit evinced by the European Powers on the Eastern question was such as enabled them to agree on two very important points, namely, on maintaining the integrity of the Ottoman Empire, and ameliorating the condition of the Christian subjects of Turkey. He was delighted during a journey he had made in company with the Empress to the north and east of France with manifestations of the popular sympathy, and with the affection that the people evinced towards him and his dynasty. He announces that the people know and have unfortunately felt, that the harvest has not been good, and that high prices are inevitable, and suggests free trade as a remedy for the calamity if the requirements of the budget will permit. The conclusion of a speech, very plausible and very Napoleonic all through, is most fatherly and philanthropic, and if it fail not in its design will convince the French people, that peace, and sufficiency, and the comforts of liberty shall hereafter flourish while Napoleon holds the reins of empire.

SUPPOSED MURDER CASE.—The Waterloo Chronicle says:—Considerable excitement has prevailed in these parts during the past few days occasioned by the arrest and imprisonment on Friday last of a German named John Meier, of Lexington Village, and his wife Dorothea Meier, charged with the supposed murder of one John Kleinhaus. It appears that Kleinhaus, who was a peddler of jewelry and small wares, was in the habit of staying at the house of the prisoners from whence he disappeared about two years ago. Many suspected that there was foul play used to get him out of the way, and, hearing of such reports, Mr. Klippert, the County Constable, "worked up" the case and arrested the prisoners, on a warrant which he had obtained from John Hoffman Esq. On Monday last a Magistrate's Court presided over by John Hoffman and Moses Springer, J. P.'s, was held. A large number of witnesses was called and examined but the evidence was regarded insufficient for the commitment of the sad parties who were accordingly liberated.

Mr. James Wylie, better known as the "Herd Laddie," has given a very extraordinary challenge to the draught players of Glasgow. He offers to play any man in Glasgow a match for £60 a-side, the draws to count against himself. He says: "Should this not be accepted, I will play any idle boasts on their (the Glasgow players) side with contemptuous

In the Upper House Senator Campbell, stated that a bill in reference to the Intercolonial Railway, was introduced during the first session of the present session, and that, as requested by the Union Act, as soon as the necessary surveys have been made the recommendation of a route will be submitted to the Imperial Parliament. Senator Campbell said, that the contract with the Canadian steamship company for service between Liverpool and New York terminates this year, but that the service between Liverpool and Halifax will be continued till the 30th of June next, and then other arrangements would be made. The same gentleman stated further that it was the intention of Government to ask a sum which would enable them to make arrangements for the transportations of mails between Canada and the West Indies. The Postal Bill will be read a second on Tuesday next. The debate on the question of privilege was introduced on Wednesday in the Commons with great ability by Mr. Holt, and well supported by Mr. Blake. The Ministry were inclined to pooh pooh the matter, and Mr. Cartier floundered for an hour and a half in his usual screeching style to belittle the question. However, its gravity became apparent to every one as the debate advanced, and this view was finally accepted by Sir John A. Macdonald, when he begged Mr. Holt to allow him to take the question into his hands, promising that the Government would deal with it. This was made more manifest when he moved the adjournment of the House at six o'clock, in order, as he stated, to allow the Government to consult on the question. The question will be resumed to-morrow by the Government. There are various surmises, as to what the Government plan will be to settle it. If they refer it to the Committee on privileges and elections, the Government will still be responsible for the recommendation of the committee as it is composed of a large majority of their supporters.

As we noticed before Mr. King of the Montreal Bank had been sent for, and on Wednesday had communication with some of the Cabinet members. Mr. Rose, the new Finance Minister was at his post in the morning. Mr. Walter Shanley is to introduce the Grand Trunk Bill in consequence of the action of the preference bondholders in England. The idea of consolidating that stock into debentures is abandoned. The Bill, it is said, will be a permissive Bill to enable the Company to issue second equipment bonds for £500,000. The committee on bankruptcy and insolvency met, and it was resolved to transmit a series of questions to the Judges, to the boards of Trade and to official Assignees, in order to acquire information as regards the working of the law.

Farewell Dinner to Dickens.
Charles Dickens was entertained by a number of his friends at a farewell dinner in London in the early part of this month. Five hundred gentlemen sat down to the table, but thousands of tickets could have been sold had the room afforded accommodation.

The correspondent of the New York Tribune says, that "nothing like it has ever before occurred in London." Lord Lytton presided, and proposed the various toasts of the evening in the forcible and dignified diction which it is in his power to wield, and which he does wield whenever he speaks or writes. He paid a glowing tribute to the famous guest, and one in which not even the keenest observer can discover the slightest trace of jealousy on the part of the eulogiser, against the eulogised for having spoken to the heart and secured a place in the affections of the world, while the more ponderous, more philosophical appealed to the head, and won merely the admiration and a more circumscribed popularity. And when Dickens with an utterance, choked at first, responded, the enthusiasm was something approaching to riot. Men forgot not only dignity and decorum, but almost prudence, and leaped on the chairs and swung glasses and decanters and champagne bottles around their heads, wildly cheering the while. The popular novelist made a graceful reply, giving the reasons why he had resolved to visit America for the second time, which were the solicitations of Americans, his own curiosity, and a desire to lay a third cable of inter-communication and alliance between the Old World and the New. The foremost men in the ranks of literature and the fine arts in England, were present, and each seemed to vie with the other in doing homage to the man whom even the satirized Americans delight to honor.

TO ADVERTISERS,

AND BUSINESS MEN.
THE WEEKLY MERCURY has a circulation larger than that of any other newspaper in this section of the Dominion, and a large proportion of its subscribers take no other journal. The space allotted to advertisements is limited, so that each has the advantage of being easily seen, and all are generally read with as much interest as news-matter. There is—as those who have tried it know—no advertising medium in this section so cheap, because there is none so profitable, to the advertiser. The paper circulates among the industrial and thrifty classes—the Farmers, Manufacturers, Merchants and Mechanics of this and adjoining counties—and is carefully read by their wives, sons, and daughters. It is safe to say that each advertisement in it is read every week by not less than ten thousand of the most intelligent of his people. He who makes his business, his merchandise, or his manufactures known to this immense number, scattered all over the country, cannot fail to do so to his own manifest and great advantage. That the WEEKLY MERCURY is the most economical medium for advertising is well known, and conclusively proved by those whose advertisements continuously appear in its columns. The great advantage that must accrue to any one who takes this method of making known his wants, his merchandise or manufactures, it is very easy to understand but can hardly be over-estimated. Every person having a farm for sale should advertise in THE WEEKLY MERCURY. Make the advertisement as short as possible, stating the advantages offered. Farmers wishing to purchase farms can always find chances by inserting a short advertisement in THE WEEKLY MERCURY. Agricultural implement manufacturers, mechanics of all kinds, merchants and business men generally, will find THE WEEKLY MERCURY specially valuable as an advertising medium. Calculating, as it does, mainly among the farmers in all parts of the country, THE WEEKLY MERCURY is read by all classes, and advertisements inserted in the weekly and daily editions will be seen by everybody. Our advertising rates are low. Advertisements for THE WEEKLY MERCURY should reach the office of publication, Macdonnell-st., east of the Golden Lion, not later than noon on Wednesday.

ENLIGHTENMENT IN NEW ZEALAND.
New Zealand is pointed to by Congress as a proof of the danger of extending the franchise, and it must be confessed, that, coming immediately after a great extension of the suffrage, they have a particularly bad appearance. But two or three considerations will show that they have no connection with that measure. In the first place, the rioters are mainly, if not wholly, of the class that is still disfranchised; in the second, they were all trained under the old system, which kept the masses out of power and almost entirely neglected their education; and, in the third place, the riots grew out of dear bread and want of work, or, in other words, starvation.—A reformer that has nothing to do with the Matter Bill.

RIOTS IN ENGLAND.—The recent riots in England are pointed to by Congress as a proof of the danger of extending the franchise, and it must be confessed, that, coming immediately after a great extension of the suffrage, they have a particularly bad appearance. But two or three considerations will show that they have no connection with that measure. In the first place, the rioters are mainly, if not wholly, of the class that is still disfranchised; in the second, they were all trained under the old system, which kept the masses out of power and almost entirely neglected their education; and, in the third place, the riots grew out of dear bread and want of work, or, in other words, starvation.—A reformer that has nothing to do with the Matter Bill.
