A Lost Gem

"Oh, yes, I'll be good. I've promised. Papa gave me a most awful lecture about you this morning. He says if I'm not good with you, he'll send me away to the very strictest school he can find. And I'm to copy you in everything, and try to be like you. That's what he said—oh, and he was sorry he couldn't be here, but he had to go to Edinburgh, and I'm glad!"

"Molly, should I say that, dear?"

"I can't help it, I am very glad. Papa is so grave and so awful. We are much more lively when he is out of the way. Even Uncle Ralph enjoys himself when papa's in Edinburgh. He lets Bertie off half his lessons, and goes to sleep in the afternoon. Will you come down to the schoolroom, dear Miss Raeburn, and shall I show you where to put your hat and cloak?"

Stella was led off by the chattering Molly and found it rather difficult to induce the young lady to settle down to her books that forenoon. At twelve o'clock the two were to have gone for a walk, but a dash of heavy rain against the windows put walking out of question. So Molly proposed to show her new friend over the house, some parts of which were very well worth seeing, and Stella willingly agreed to anything that her pupil suggested.

Torresmuir was partly an old and partly a new building. The older portion was built of thick and solid stone; the tower at one end was of masonry which seemed as if it would defy the flight of time for centuries so cunningly had the great stones been welded together. This tower was little used except by Mr. Ralph Kingscott, who, as Molly informed Miss Raeburn, occupied two rooms, one above another, in this part of the building. "You see, it's very awkwardly placed," said Molly, with a learned air. "When you leave the newer part of the house you go through this long gallery—a passage—it is only a passage, after all; then you come straight into the Octagon room, which Uncle Ralph has made into a regular curiosity shop; then straight from the Octagon room into his sitting-room, which looks out on the hillside and down towards the Braem. This winding stair, in the little space between the Octagon room and the sitting-room, leads up to Uncle Ralph's bedroom, and to another room that nobody ever uses; and above that there is a roof where one has a most beautiful view—but we scarcely ever go up, because Uncle Ralph does not seem to care about our coming farther than the Octagon room—if so far. It is a great shame," said Molly, in an aggrieved tone, "because the tower would make such a nice little retreat for Bertie and me. One can't hear a single sound from these rooms in the new part of the house. But Uncle Ralph keeps us out."

"He has grown fond of the rooms, I dare say," said Stella.

"I don't think he is very fond of anything," Molly answered, with a curious touch of cynicism in her fresh young voice, "but it is convenient for him, I dare say, to be able to go in and out just as he likes. There is a little door from his sitting-room into the garden, and papa never knows when he is out after midnight or not."

Stella thought this sort of conversation undesirable, and changed it by asking the names of certain curiosities which were ranged in glass cases on some side tables in the Octagon room.

"Pretty, aren't they?" said Molly, carelessly, as she ran over the names with the air of one who had often rehearsed them previously; "but this is the most curious thing. Do you see that empty case?"

Stella looked, and observed that a large morocco case lined with velvet stood empty under a glass shade.

"There's a story about it," said Molly. "I remember when it used to hold a stone—a beautiful crystal, I believe, sparkling with all the colors of the rainbow. It was in the days before mamma died, and a sudden shadow came over her merry face."

"Was it stolen?" Stella asked, to break the pause that followed.

"That's the odd part of it. Of course it was, but there was no way of finding out how or why. Just before mamma died it disappeared. And you have no idea what a fuss the old servants in the house, and even papa himself, made about it. It was ridiculous!"

"Was it valuable?"

"Not a bit, I believe. Only—do you remember a piece of poetry called 'The Luck of Edenhall'?"

"Yes; Longfellow translated it from the German."

"Well, there was just such another old story about this stone and our family. It was said to have been brought from the East by one of our ancestors; and as long as it was in our possession we were to be lucky in every way, and when it went the luck was to go too. And now it has gone!"

"And the luck remains," said Stella, smiling.

"I suppose so. But I don't know. Nothing has gone right since—nothing. Of course, it has nothing to do with the stone; I am not so stupidly superstitious as poor old Jean, our nurse, used to be; but still—ever since we have been unhappy—I don't know why—"

The tears were filling Molly's beautiful hazel eyes. Stella looked sympathizingly at her and took her hand, meaning to give her the advice respecting her disposition of the happiness of her disposition occurred. The inner door of the Octagon room, leading to the staircase, flew open, and Mr. Kingscott made his appearance. He paused, as if in surprise, at the sight of the two girls, and Stella, who had not seen him before, glanced inquiringly at Molly. But Molly pouted, frowned, threw back her mop of ruddy golden hair, and did not seem inclined to speak.

"I must introduce myself, as my niece does not seem inclined to perform the office for me," said Ralph Kingscott, showing his white teeth in a smile which Stella found singularly unpleasant. "My name is Kingscott, Miss Raeburn—I think I have the pleasure of speaking to Miss Raeburn?—and I have the honor to be Miss Molly's uncle as well as the tutor of my nephew, Bertie. Our office should bring us together. We must have something in common, must we not?"

Stella only bowed; the man's manner did not attract her, and she felt it impossible to do anything but look serious and much dignified.

"So you have been looking at our poor little curiosities?" said Kingscott, easily. "And has Molly been explaining to you the loss of the luck of the house?"

"It can't be explained," said Molly, almost rudely. "Nobody knows."

"And nobody ever will know," said her uncle, in a mocking tone. "Nobody will ever know—unless the Luck of the House comes back again, and that will not be in your time or mine. 'Gone is the Luck of Edenhall,' as the poem says."

"I believe you've got it!" cried Molly, so savagely that Stella stood aghast. "Perhaps you stole it and hid it away—on purpose, vex papa!"—She bit her lip, and the tears again dimmed her flashing eyes. "You would not mind—you know you don't care whether things are right or wrong. I've heard you say so—if only they are pleasant to you."

"Molly dear, you must not speak in that way," said Stella, in alarm, to hope you will excuse her, Mr. Kingscott."

Ralph Kingscott gave a short laugh and turned on his heel. But the momentary whitening of his lips, the keen, steel-like glance that he shot at Molly from out his narrow dark eyes, showed that her shaft had, in some way or another, gone straight home. "I can afford to despise Molly's tempers, Miss Raeburn," he said, "but I don't envy you the task of encountering them."

Poor Stella did indeed at that moment feel as if her task were likely to be heavier than she had anticipated. She tried to talk seriously, and yet gently, to her pupil about her behavior; but Molly turned rather sulky at the first hint of reproof, and did not recover her good humor until late in the afternoon.

Mr. Moncrieff stayed for some days in Edinburgh, and Stella had thus no opportunity of consulting him, as she wished to do, about the plan of study which Molly was to pursue. After the first day or two, she found the girl tolerably easy to manage. The great difficulty lay in the fact that, while Molly had the physique of a woman, she had the spirit, the thoughtlessness, the waywardness of a child. Stella had rather a startling example of the difficulties which will be encountered in dealing with such a character soon after her introduction to the Moncrieffs.

It was the second Saturday after Stella's duties had begun. Mr. Moncrieff was still away from home. Saturday was a whole holiday; but as the day proved still and fine, Molly and her brother (who was quite as much enamored of Miss Raeburn as was Molly herself) came to her lodgings and begged that she would join them in an excursion that they were about to make to the Lochs of the Lowes. It seemed that they knew most of the owners of the mansions on the banks of the different lochs, and save when the rights of fishing and boating were let to summer tenants of the houses, the young Moncrieffs had always been allowed to disport themselves as they pleased about the waters. At present, Molly, who had met with the name of the Admirable Crichton in her lessons, was anxious to show Stella the very place where that prodigy of learning had been born; and it was with this laudable object in view that she at last persuaded her teacher to join her for the day.

WESTERN ONTARIO.

An interesting case will be tried at Chatham this week at the assizes. It is one of slander brought by Wm. Stokes, agent for the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway at Merlin, against Wm. Simpson, a resident of the same place.

The Kingsville Preserving Company has been sold under mortgage. It has been a loser ever since it was started, and this is blamable, so it is alleged, to those in charge knowing nothing of the business.

The Woodstock and East Oxford Shooting and Fishing Club has elected the following officers: President, J. H. Neill; vice-president, D. W. Karn; secretary-treasurer, W. A. Karn; trustees, Geo. Eden, R. M. Revell, W. Totten. About 10,000 spotted trout will be added to the nursery ponds.

Andrew Le Duc, who was arrested on Monday night charged with seducing Mary Dumochelle, the 14-year-old daughter of a Grand Marais farmer, near Windsor, was committed to the reformatory. Le Duc, it is said, was engaged to a young woman named Arguette, and she came to see him. When she found that she had married the Dumochelle girl she burst into tears and left the room.

Thomas Kirkpatrick of Thedford, justice of the peace and ex-division court clerk, died Wednesday, April 3, at the advanced age of 84 years, at his residence in Thedford after a prolonged illness of several years. He was one of the oldest inhabitants of the village, having settled in it before the Grand Trunk Railway was put through. He was an ardent and consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, and leaves a widow to mourn his loss. The funeral took place Monday morning from Knox Church, which was largely attended, the services being conducted by the pastor, Rev. H. Currie, from whence they proceeded to Stratford for interment, six bearers.

Allan Young, a wealthy and influential gentleman of Oxfordshire, England, has recently arrived in Woodstock, and has purchased the old D'Arville farm on the 13th line. Mr. Young has been engaged in philanthropic work among young men in England, and his estate there has been devoted to the education and training of Englishmen desirous of becoming farmers. Finding his estate in England too small, he decided to remove to Canada, and on a visit to Oxford was struck with the availability of a number of farms in the vicinity. The system is to bring young men over from the old country, keep them on the farm until they have become proficient and then provide them with situations in the country. Before long a colony of Englishmen will be located near Woodstock.

The Ingersoll Football Club has elected the following officers: Hon. president, J. H. Rose; president, Jas. Vance; vice-president, P. G. Gundy; secretary, H. Ellis; captain, W. M. Govenlock; curator, Gordon Ellis.

James Allen, Indian agent on the Saugeen reserve, died on Tuesday, age 70 years. Mr. Allen had been an active politician on the Conservative side in North Bruce for 40 years. He was the founder of the village of Allenford.

The farmers and fruit-growers of Bruce are putting forth efforts for the location of a fruit experimental station near Port Elgin. The proposals of the Ontario Minister of Agriculture in this respect are very popular with those who are interested in fruit culture.

Myrtle Smart, the 10-year-old daughter of Robert Smart, of Tilsonburg, while sitting in the buggy on Tuesday night with her back to the dashboard, was kicked by the horse in the back of the head, the base of the skull being broken, and causing death in a short time after the accident.

Preliminary steps were taken Tuesday to establish a branch Humane Society in Chatham. A meeting was largely attended by both ladies and gentlemen, and among those who spoke were the mayor, T. Scullard, barrister; Mr. Mackintosh, of the Merchants' Bank; Rev. R. McCosh, and Dr. Holmes.

The late Mrs. D. D. Hay, wife of the esteemed registrar of North Perth, whose death occurred on Monday, was a native of Dumfries, Scotland. She leaves, besides her husband, a family of nine sons and six daughters, all grown up. They are R. R. W. J. Hay, of Listowel; James F. Hay, of Melita, Man., and Duncan Hay, of Stratford; Mrs. George Clime, of Montreal and three unmarried daughters, who reside at home. The funeral was interred at Listowel on Wednesday, April 10.

WINGHAM.

April 9.—For the last two or three days the river has been very high. Yesterday, the Gorrie dam, having been swept away, the water rose rapidly. A gang of men is kept at the C. P. R. bridge to keep away driftwood and ice. The prairie near the town is flooded. The new race track is also flooded at the lower town. Quite a few people had to move out for the night on account of the house being surrounded by water. It is thought the highest point has been reached, and the water will lower. The flood was so high that the electric light plant was not run.

Rev. Dr. Fraser, of Hamilton, gave an interesting lecture in the Presbyterian Church last night entitled "From Jerusalem to Damascus on a Pony."

Mr. Chas. Gillespie, of Whitechurch, has moved into town, and intends going into the egg business.

Livingstone Bros., of Listowel, are going to start a flax mill in town. Mr. Geo. A. Harris is giving them four acres of land, and the people of the town are giving them $500.

Out of Sorts.—Symptoms, headache, loss of appetite, furred tongue, and general indisposition. These symptoms, if neglected, develop into acute disease. It is a trite saying that an "ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," and a little attention at this point may save months of sickness and large doctors' bills. For this complaint take from two to three of Partridge's Vegetable Pills on going to bed, and one or two for three nights in succession, and a cure will be effected.

GUILELESS FARMERS

Swindled by a Young Man Who Offered to Paint Signs.

LAMBERTVILLE, N. J., April 10.—The farmers in this vicinity are being swindled by a new method, which is very profitable to the swindler. A young man of good appearance and with a slick tongue visited several farmers here and offered to paint signs on the barns for a small amount. They paid a deposit and then signed a slip of paper, promising to pay the rest of the money when the work was done. The young man never returned to finish the job, but generally the slip of paper which was signed turns up for a larger amount as a promissory note.

MIDDLESEX.

The late Mrs. Abigail Decker, of Lambeth, whose maiden name was Robertson, was born in the county of Welland on April 7, 1842, and peacefully passed away on the morning of April 2, 1895. When very young she removed to the vicinity of London, where she was united in marriage to her husband, Mr. Gideon Decker, in the year 1860, and removed to the Gore of Westminster. Early in her married life she with her husband, was converted, and united with the Congregational Church in London, where they were regular attendants, until her failing health, brought on by asthma, prevented them from attending church services. She was a devoted wife and mother, a valued neighbor and a faithful friend. Her strong common-sense, clear intellect and genial disposition were felt by all who came in contact with her. The memory of her devoted life is a blessed heritage to her sorrowing husband and son. On Friday, April 5, she was buried in the church yard at Lambeth. Rev. W. Claris (Congregationalist) and Rev. T. W. Blairford (Methodist) took part in the services. The large number of people that attended her funeral testified to the universal esteem in which she was held.

BELL PIANO

Detroit, April 2, 1895.
To the Bell Organ and Piano Co. (Ltd.),
London, Ont.

Gentlemen,—I have sung to your Pianos a great many times during my engagements throughout the Dominion, and have always been greatly impressed with the brilliancy, fullness, yet sympathetic tone of the BELL PIANOS and support they give to the voice, and consider them unsurpassed by any Pianos, either American or Canadian.

It gives me great pleasure to testify to the excellence of your Piano.
