MR. MONK. Mr. Borden's ablest colleague, ex

He is a skillful parliamentarian, comports himself in the House with dig- figures for six years are: nity and seriousness, is highly educat ed, and a fluent and polished speaker in French and English, though not an prator. His somewhat cold and class room style of speaking (he is a university teacher), probably militated against his leadership of the Quebec wine of his party, his compatriots preferring the animated eloquence with which their public men are plentifully gifted. No doubt he found his post and it must have seemed absolutely hopeless two years ago when he was read out of the Conservative party by the Toronto News and other Ontario Conservative spokesmen because of his French-Canadian interests, because as a French-Canadian he felt under the necessity of convincing English-Canadians that he was not partial to his own race. Mr. Monk dwelt much on the dangers of Imperialism; he has always accused Laurier of promoting the concentration of power in England, to the impairment of Canadians output being 32,878,590 output being 32,878,590 contending that the privileges of the estroyed; while Mr. Borden led the attack from the opposite quarter, destancing that the subject of education be left exclusively to the new provcareer has been his sectionalism. Probably no the Conservative party, and enlisted one will ever have occasion to object under Mr. Bourassa's banner, becoming the parliamentary leader of the Nationalists. He and all the Frenchspeaking candidates in Quebec, Conservatives and Nationalists, fought their battle entirely on the naval issue. They denounced the Government's project as the of conscription; denied any obligation on Canada's part toward the mother e matter of naval defense, and pledged themselves to repeal the gation of the laws and ordinances conlaw, and to urge a plebiscite. In support of this demand they quoted Mr. Borden's own utterances in the House and on the hustings, promising that can't be sure of all this, but at any the people would be consulted before a permanent naval policy was adopted. There were two sets of French-honors, the Nationalists, led by Mr Monk, and the Bleus, of whom Mr. Rodolphe Forget was the foremost representative. Neither group would compromise, and Mr. Borden had to decide between them. He chose the Nationalists. The Conservative To ronto Telegram is authority for the assertion that they would have turned twenty votes against him if they had not been granted three portfolios. At any rate they have scored the first victory. It is to be hoped when Mr. Borden is more firmly seated in the saddle he will refuse to obey their orders and will give the country his own lead on national and imperial questions.

The Advertiser ventures the prediction that Mr. White will get the Conservative nomination unopposed if the wants it. This Torento bluster doesn't amount to much. Politicians who sing "Rule, Britannia, and join hands with the Quebec Nationalists are not sincere. As for the party managers in East Middlesex they are chiefly concerned about patronage, and will not deem it prudent to put obstacles in the way of a cabinet minister, with a portfolio.
