The Missanabie left Liverpool on the night of Friday, April 9. She had 735 passengers on board, many of them solliers returning home to Canada from the front.

The crew of the vessel and her passengers were congratulating themselves on having passed safely through the submarine zone, when off the north coast of Ireland, on Saturday morning, a German undersea boat was sighted not a quarter of a mile away. The engines of the liner were put full steam ahead, and a contest between the ship and the submarine began. The latter tried to get the Missanabie into a position where she could torpedo her, but the liner's speed was too great, and, deftly manoeuvred by her captain, she drew away into safety.
