Speaking at the dinner given to him in Chatham, N. B., Mr. Blake said: The Tory press had given out that he was no orator. Well, he never pretended to be one. He claimed only that he was a plain man, who said plain things in a plain way, on plain subjects to plain folks like himself. (Laughter and applause.) But in Cape Breton an incident has been related to him which might bear repeating. His friend Mr. McIsaac said that an old Scotchman who had come to hear him speak, afterwards expressed hi surprise, for, said he, "I thocht Mr. Blake wad be sae able as I cau'l noo oonderstaun him."
