firmer and rounder, and she is the merriest, healthiest little mortal possible. He always smoked after breakfast, and after lunch, with her in the room, neither of us dreaming it was injurious to her. But for his providential absence this time, I doubt whether it would ever have occurred to me; and we might have lost our darling, for she was wasting sadly. It was acting like a slow poison upon her. This is a true, unvarnished statement, which my nurse can corroborate. When shall we have a parliament that will dare to tax our slow poisons to the utmost? A NICE MORAL. "Let me tell you a story," said Mr. De-May I give (?) my recent experience of tobacco smoke? It may be a warning to others. I have one child,—a little girl not yet two years old, a fair-haired, blue-eyed pet, who was as healthy as the birds when she was born. For more than a year past, ever since she was old enough to be less in the nursery and more with her father and me,—she has ailed mysteriously. I could not say she was ill, yet she was hardly ever well. I was kept in a perpetual state of anxiety about her. The symptoms were absence of appetite, complaints of sickness, stomach and digestion altogether out of

The duty of these officers is to stop and the utmost of the utmost many things that tried her strength of resolution to the utmost. On a bright beautiful morning the young Queen was waited upon at her palace at Windsor by the Duke of Wellington, who had brought from London various papers requiring her signature to render them operative. One of them was a sentence of court-martial, pronounced against a soldier of the Line—that sentence that he be shot dead! The Queen looked upon the wondrous beauties that nature had spread to her view. "What has this man done?" she asked. The Duke look ed at the paper, and replied, "Ah, my royal mistress, that man, I fear, is incorrigible! He has deserted three times."
"And can you not say anything in his behalf, my lord?" Wellington shook his head." "Oh, think again, I pray you!" Seeing that her Majesty was so deeply moved, and the stable unsul to supply the extra waste. I will try mercy in this man's case; and I charge you, your Grace, to let me know the result. And you may tell him that your good word saved him." Then she took the paper, and worde, with a bold, firm hand, across the dark gage, the saving word—"Pardoned!" The Duke was fond of telling the story; and he was willing also to confess that the giving of that paper to the pardoned soldier gave him far more joy than he could have experienced from the taking of a city.

Emergencies may arise at any time in a man's life when he must get to one place from another in as short a time as possible; the modern way should be carried on at least to a limited extent by every intelligent family in this enlightened age. Even one swarm of bees in fair condition, and with such a case, and fast walking does not enter into it.

In connection with the long distance running, which is so steadily growing into favor, has come the organization of outing clubs and a rapid increase in the number of cross country runs. She wears knickerbockers and high-top boots—a centume light and comfortable for either riding or walking, and one with which it is impossible to get caught in the saddle. In regard to the side-saddle Miss Littell says: "It is a cruelty to both the horse and the woman. It injures and tires the animal, is liable to give spinal curvature and other troubles to the women, leads to one-sided development, and is certainly ungraceful and unsafe."

Daughter's Allowance.

There is no essential of a girl's education so often overlooked as practical training in money matters. It is no uncommon matter for girls of sixteen and eighteen to know little or nothing about value of money. They remain at home, and the father and mother, who have always provided for their wants, scarcely realize that the child has grown to womanhood, and when for any reason the home is broken up, the girl finds that she knows nothing of practical values, and this she usually learns after a bitter experience of life's discipline. A wise writer has said: "The love of money, with the parallel—the looseness of management of it—is indeed the root of all evil." How can a girl learn the management of her expenditures if she has had no experience? Begin while they are children and teach them gradually the use of money, by arranging household work so they can earn a few pennies, and perhaps by giving moneyed asswards for exercial croallage in seaked.

ranging household work so they can earn a few pennies, and perhaps by giving moneyed rewards for special excellence in school. Whenever children are given money let them understand it is because they have earned it by good behavior. Money should not be doled out to a child as if it were a beggar. It has a right to its allowance. One of the earliest lessons of life that a parent should endeavor to teach by word and deed, is the law of this world, that no value can be received honestly without the receiver in some way having given an equivalent, or in some way having earned the gift, if gift it be called, if only by love and faithfulness.

Half the trouble and vexation of the world is caused by a failure to recognize this law, and by the endeavor of individuals to get something for nothing. Children that are early taught that they must furnish an equivalent for money received, learn the value of money, and grow up to be respected because they are self-respecting.

The plan we have suggested is followed "Not as I knows of." n many families, and each child in the

A WHOOP INDEED.—A lady was mother of a bright little boy about three years traordinary expenditures are in order. In one family the writer remembers it is the rule of the mother to make a liberal allowance of paper, pencils and other sundries for school, and if any of these articles are wasted or used up before a certain time, the child in fault is compelled to purchase others from her own money, a very definite and usually effective way of reaching carelessness. By gradually becoming used to spending money, and learning by "paying" the suffering and folly of carelessness, the child grows to learn values, and when she arrives at an age suitable may use an

FAULT-FINDING.—Don't get in the habit of it. It's the easiest thing to do, and the hardest thing to stop in the wide, wide world. It ruins your temper and spoils the shape of your mouth. Try and see the good rather than the disagreeable, in the people and your surroundings. You would
