There shall be peace at home

(Langhter and cheers) There is peace at home, my Lord. Circumspice (Renewed cheers) It is one of the mest precious and cherished recollections of my humble history. that, on the very day I was ordained to the pastoral office according to the rates of Protestant Discenters, I attended the first meeting in the town of Birmingham for the formation of an association in support of the British and Foreign Bible Society. On the first day I bowed before the altar of truth, and I pledged myself before God and in the presence of many witnesses, to preach the faith as I understood it; on the next day, I showed with no less reverence, before the alter of charity, and pledged myself before other witnesses to be the messenger of love. On the first day I went within the carrier of one particular section of the Christian Church, on the next I soared above that barrier into the amplitude of the Church of the first-born, breathed its puro air, basked in its sunshine, and enjoyed the brotherhood and liberty of these whose names in common are written in heaven -(Applause) I will allude for a moment to the first Bible meeting that I was ever privileged to astend. It was at Freemason's Hall, and was composed of men of all creeds and of all political parties. There was about it something of the solemnity of a funeral, sombined with the merriment of a wedding; and well might this be the case, for we were met at the burial of bigotry, and by a strange conjunction of circumstances, at the marriage of truth and love. (Cheers.) In one respect, that meeting differed widely from the present, there-were no ladies there, except indeed a fow heroines, who contrived to steal furtive glances at our proceedings from a gallery, it had not then been discovered that the ladies were the Society's most efficient allies. (Applause) On the platform were peers, members of the council, dignitaries of the Church. There was Vansittari, afterwards Lord Bex-ley, the elequent and able controversialist, who, in one of his earliest paniphlets floated over the land that beautiful sentiment, "If we cannot unite all minds let us reconcile all hearts." There was Grant, who lent us his Indian influence to carry forward our pur-pose in that part of the world, and whose son, if I mistake not, is present to-day, there was Thornton, a name dear to every one who has philanthropy in his soul; there was Macauly, the father of the most cloquent English historian, there was Stephen, the father of the learned Professor of History at Oxford, there was the eloquent and fluent Owen, the charm of every assembly which he addressed, there was the silver-tongued Hughes; and there was that venerable and sacred antique (Dr. Steinkops ) who sits by my side, and who is the only member of the original committee present at this mooring. (Cheers.) There too, was Wilberforce, his diminutive and apparently insignificant frame, instinct in every muscle and in every hmb, with the energy which he exerted in the great cause of negro emancipation. Would that that illustrious man were with us, with all his catholicity of feeling, with all his philanthropy, his wisdom, his eloquenco. And, perhaps, unseen by sense, he is present. We would say, enjoy thy repose, illustrious man! Thy name is sense, he is present. We would say, enjoy broad light of Christian truth. (Cheers.) I should have an extraordinary fund, out of thy repose, illustrious man! Thy name is rejuce when that great standard is raised a which the committee may be enabled to strike still fragrant and there example is animating round which the whole armies of Christen off a grand jubilee edition, in the 140 land the minds of millions still, endeavouring to dom may collect themselves. Did I say "the guages of which we have heard, and that this tappy occasion, and that we can say with the poet of our childhood.—

"Whatever brawle disturb the street," Whatever brawle disturb the street," Cheers.) My Lord, we were told that a fabric composed of such materials must soon Trumble to pieces with its own weight— Where are the prophets, and where their va-ticinations? The prophets are slumbering in the grave, and their predictions, like the odes of the sphil, are scattered to the winds. Word of God. (Hear, hear) But it is my (Cheers). Again, we have been told that sincere consistion, that we ought never on this is a Society for the times. It is, indeed, such occasions as these, to speak of the Rothe great breakwater of all Protestant countrice against the rising tide and the dashing billows of Popery billows of Popery (Cheers.) I confess, however, that I do not share in the panic of many people on this subject. It is related of Sherdian that on one occasion he said, "Let there be a corrupt Ministry, extreme preregative, a venal House of Commons, and a servile House of Lords on one side, and give me, on the other, the liberty of the press, and I will explode them all " (Cheers.) In claims: give it the Inquisition, give it the detailed. Mannooth grant. (Cheers.) Give it Cardinal Wiseman. (Applause.) Give it Cardinal Wiseman. (Applause.) Give it the measures and plans of the committee for the canon law of a hierarchy, and with this little instrument (holding up a small Bible), away (Great applause.) Go on, my country, to support this and other kindred institutions, go on to guard thy Sabbaths from deconsecrate thy power, thy commerce, thy wealth, thy science, and thine art to Him from whom all human greatness proceeds, and then preserved in thy strength and thy majesty to be foremost among the nations which shall bring glory and honour to the New Jerusaand happiest sharer of its ineffable felicity.-(Cheors.)

resolution, said - I have no old services to mfor to, my Lord, like those who have preceded me, but I come before you in the official capacity of President of the Scotch branch of the Bible Society—(cheers)—and I dare say the committee will acknowledge that that branch has not been altogether inefficient in its proceedings. (Hear, hear.) I am also anxious briefly to express my personal feelings in reference to this excuse. It has been observed to day that the original conception of the Society was opposed as partaking of the nature of an unprincipled coalition. Perhaps at this moment I may be supposed to have an undue bias in favour of coalitions .-(Laughter ) I certainly have a great bias towards a coalition like that which I now see around me (Cheers.) I am not one of those who underrate the importance of the existence of separate religious communions, and this I say without reference to the quostion, how far the different forms of worship or of discipline may be founded upon the Word of God, but I feel that an undue importance is often attached to such differences, and I rejoice when I can go from creeds and catechisms, whether they be those of my own Church or those of other Churches, to the whole armies?" Alas! I was reminded for some expression, which fell from the lips of preceding speakers, that a considerable part of what I am anxious, as far as my own feelings are concerned, to regard as the Christian world, is not unded with us in desiring to spread freely, without note or comment, the man Untholic Church as in this respect a united body. (Hear, hear) It is my firm belief, that the great mass of the people in Roman Catholic countries would be ready and willing to acknowledge the authority of the Word of God. (Cheers.) The only feeling of indignation which ever rises in my mind. is that which is directed against that small part of the Christian world, the office-bearers in the Roman Catholic Church, who stand between their people and access to the Word of ing the institution of a Jubileo Fund, to be and freedom universally to circulate it, unappropriated to the following purposes, nameder the blessing of God I will blow the whole 1,-1. The adoption, as far as practicable, of an extensive and efficient system of col-portage, throughout Great Britain, in the Year of Jubileu, the supply of emigrants; secration; go on to circulate God's Word, together with special grants of Bible and Testa-and exhibit it in all thy conduct, go on to ments to prisons, schools, missions, and other charitable and benevolent institutions in this country. 2. Special grants to Ireland, in such ways as may be bereafter determined never will come the time when thou shalt be, upon. 3. Special offers to India, Australia, like ancient Tyre, a barren rock for fishermen to dry their nets upon; but thou wilt be or otherwise. 4 Special grants to China. and such other parts of the world as may appear open to special operations. 5. The cstablishment of a special and separate fund. lem - the most munificent contribution to the from the annual produce of which pecuniary plendours of the millenium, and the largest aid may be granted, at the discretion of the committee, to per one in the employ of the Society, including the colportours abroad, The Duke of Angret, in supporting the and to their vidous and children, when in solution, said — I have no old services to reat the beginning of the last century this little island could scarcely be said to have any connection with foreign lands; God then raised it up to a position of paramount power and dominion, and at the same time he gave it a larger share of evangeheal principles than was vouchsafed to any other country in Christendoni. If, as a nation, we are sometimes apt to boast of having naval stations all over the globe, are we not bound to regard them as instruments for diffusing the Bible and evangelising the world, places from which spiritual warriors may go torth for the conquest of the surrounding countries? (Hear, hear.) Let us go on with the work of Bible circulation. Why should there not be a Jubilee Fund?-I will not say of £50,000 or £100,000 but of £500,000, on behalt of this great Society '--(Loud Cheers.) Nothing, I am persuaded. is wanted for this end but the will. I plead for high contributions. (Laugher.) I have an utter detestation of dribblets; they always remind mo of drops of water falling in the stalactite caverns; and on this occasion L wouldn't have money reluctantly squeezed out of the pocket of Christians. (Much Cheering.) What I would propose is, that we ing.) What I would propose is, that we should have an extraordinary fund, out or
