attention to parliament and ask for consideration of the problem which confronts the nation. And immediately the members of parliament flock into this chamber to listen to or participate in debates.

So in some ways we act as a fire department to protect our country and our people in case of emergency. Then on occasions, when there is no crisis, and no great issue is in front of us, we carry on at a lower level and our work is largely routine.

Mr. Speaker, I find I shall have to carry on with my observations tomorrow because there are some other thoughts creeping into my mind which I cannot develop in the course of the next minute or so. I do not intend to deal with the speech from the throne as a whole, because it has been effectively demolished by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen) and others.

I wish to deal specifically with the emphasis which the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is placing on the management of the business of the House of Commons. This has become a favourite topic with him. Periodically he talks about what we must do here to organize the business of the house so that things may be done more efficiently and effectively and so that there may be some streamlining of this institution. With this preview of what I shall say tomorrow, I now resume my seat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty pursuant to standing order 38, subsection 3, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on the subamendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Douglas) which was negatived on the following division:
