If Your Blood is Not Good Your Health Cannot Be.

Sanguinol is a blood enricher and nerve restorer.

And Sanguinol can be relied upon to do all that the physicians who compounded the formula and gave it to a suffering people expected it to do. Not a "bracer" that will be but a temporary "bracer," which by some momentary exhilaration lifts one's nerves high only to dash them to the ground again. No! Sanguinol is a permanent health tonic—a powerful nerve restorer and rich, red blood builder.

Do you know that the seat of all nerve trouble is the stomach—that the starting point for all stomach troubles is fermentation—that fermentation means poor digestion—and that indigestion is the forerunner of nerve trouble? You can guard against all this by taking Sanguinol.

And you can be cured of these troubles in their most acute stages if they have been contracted. Sanguinol sweetens the spring of life, corrects our health, vim and vigor in a flood of energy, vim and vigor for old and young.

Get a bottle of Sanguinol from the following sources: Corner Bloor and Brook, 290 Bathurst street, corner Bloor and Spadina, 1621 Dundas street, corner Parliament and Carlton, 770 Queen street east, Balaam and Queen, 282 College street.

Mrs. Gamble Hysterical in Court Yesterday.

S. M. Gamble, financial agent of the Ironworkers' Union, who has been on trial at Whitby during the past two days on a charge of burning a scaffold rope with sulphuric acid, is out on bail, as the jury disagreed and was dismissed. Mrs. Gamble, who was present with her little child, became hysterical yesterday under the strain while Crown Attorney Creswick was addressing the jury, shouting out: "He mustn't talk like that! Don't let him talk that way!" until Mr. Justice Britton had to order her to be removed from the court.

EARLS COURT.

F. W. Nord presided at a meeting of the executive of the Earls Court District Voters' Association last night in the Dominion Bank chambers in the absence of President Holmes, who is unwell. Mr. Nord, having been spokesman of the delegation which attended the meeting of the British Imperial Association on Thursday night, reported to the executive regarding the meeting.

He said that the delegation had been cordially received and he was given an opportunity to address the gathering, when he explained that while the District Voters' Association was in full accord with the objects of the British Imperial Association still the former could receive as voters municipal voters that would not be received as members by the Imperial Association because of their nationality. Much good could be accomplished, however, he pointed out, by the two associations working in harmony to advance the interests of the district.

AND THE WORST IS YET TO COME

The machine goes down one row and back the next. The women and children begin to pick. A tough-looking hobo bends to the work, but the city men sit down. The boss hurries to that part of the field. The men have concluded that he is not paying enough for that class of work and want a better cent per sack. Sometimes the boss says, "On your way if you don't like the wages," but more likely he debates the matter with them. Everything stops for a half-hour, and probably by that time they are back to work.

About 10 o'clock some young chap who probably has worked in an office in Kansas City drops his bucket and starts for the shade. He rests a few minutes; then tells the boss he wants his pay. It is too hot for him. There is nothing to do but pay him and catch the next man who comes along the road to take his place. There is more trouble at noon, and in the afternoon one, two, three or four go to the shade. But thru it all the picker hobo goes on with little complaint of heat or conditions.

The fellows who pick potatoes in Kansas every year are of a different tribe from the harvest hands. These men start on the Texas Guano in March and pick strawberries. When the strawberry season is over in Texas they work north into Oklahoma, and from there to the Missouri strawberry fields around Springfield and Joplin. After they have picked strawberries in three States they move into Kansas, and if it is too early to dig potatoes they work at anything they can find to do until the potato season begins.

The next month they will go to the

Perhaps the feature of the evening was the presentation of a magnificent cup to the school by Principal Hutton on behalf of O. B. Stanton, brother of Eldridge Stanton, who with his wife was drowned at Niagara Falls some time ago. Mr. Hutton said that the cup was to commemorate the heroism of Eldridge Stanton. A similar cup is being sent to the school in Cleveland, Ohio, where the hero, John Burrill Heacock, who helped Stanton in his terrific struggle for life, attended.

The cups are of bronze with silver handles and fittings, and a scroll with the record of the tragedy is fitted in the base of the cup. POTATO-PICKING TIME IN KANSAS

An Occupation in Which
Hobo Labor is Made to Count.

During the potato-digging season in the Kaw Valley, eastern Kansas, the temperature gets so high that only two classes of people can stay in the fields the entire day. These are the native farmers and their families and the hobo who drift from one part of the country to another when good wages are offered to laborers.

Hundreds of men went to the potato fields the past season, says the Kansas City Star, but most of them have drifted away within twenty-four hours.

When work is started in the fields in the morning, there is a man with a four-horse team running the digger. He belongs to the neighborhood, so he doesn't count. Then comes a line-up of twelve to sixteen pickers. They are the native farmers and their families and the hobo who drift from one part of the country to another when good wages are offered to laborers.

They live out of doors. They don't count. Then comes a line-up of twelve to sixteen pickers. They are the native farmers and their families and the hobo who drift from one part of the country to another when good wages are offered to laborers.

Next in reliability are the hoboes. They live out of doors. They don't count. Then comes a line-up of twelve to sixteen pickers. They are the native farmers and their families and the hobo who drift from one part of the country to another when good wages are offered to laborers.
