Betty Compson
in
"The White Flower"

Just Like a Trip on the Balmly Pacific

PICTURED FOR THE GREATER PART IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS, and in every respect one of the most delightful photoplays in which she has ever appeared, Betty Compson's latest Paramount stellar vehicle, "The White Flower," is a screen attraction of superior value. It presents for the first time in a motion picture story Hawaiian scenes with which tourists alone are familiar, but, in addition to this, the theme is one of signal drama. Written, adapted and directed by Mrs. Julia Crawford Ivers, a distinguished photo playwright, is a cinema attraction vested with the weird charm of the tropics whose magic spell few are able to resist. Abounding in dramatic and thrilling episodes, finely directed, superbly photographed and admirably acted, "The White Flower" should prove one of the most entertaining pictures of the current season.
