Iron, Steel, Metal

And Machinery

In its summary of the iron, steel, metal and machinery markets for the week ending Sept. 4, Canadian Machinery and Manufacturing News, Toronto, makes the following comment:

United States markets should show a tendency to come down to a more settled condition shortly, greatly to the relief of the steel and machine tool industries. As far as the steel situation is concerned, the independents seem to be far more certain than the corporation that their plants will not be tied up.

They have assured their agencies in this country that the chances for trouble are becoming more remote each week.

There are some concerns in Canada, especially those building boilers, that have a fine line of business just now.

They are buying very heavily and have orders that run well on into the future.

In fact, in referring to one of these concerns a Toronto warehouse stated that:

"We have sold more material to them in the last week than in any similar time since we have known them."

There have been no prices charged during the week. There seems to be a desire on the part of many in the trade to leave prices alone as far as possible.

The claim is made that further increases simply tend to keep up and increase the agitation that is going on against the cost of materials.

United States points state that the exchange rate is hindering business there, especially anything that looks like export trade, as nations can purchase their needs to much better advantage in the larger centers. There was a slight recovery. Local dealers have not marked down their lists but they state that their business is quieting and only nominally correct and may change very suddenly.

The scrap metal market is passing through a peculiar era, for which there seems no good reason, unless it be that there is some manipulation going on in the larger centers. There was a slight recovery. Local dealers have not marked down their lists but they state that their business is quieting and only nominally correct and may change very suddenly.
