Is it essential that resources diminish with use? Bo they always do so at present? Is there anything in the argument of the Canadian "stand-patters" that the country is going to become poverty-stricken beyond all computation if it is thrown upen for more free and full development? To think so is wholly to disregard the chief forces of our present day civilization. There was the old-motive of explosition America. The installable desire to noble examiles in America. The argument used by the Conservatives, that our natural resources will be exploited and wasted if tariff restrictions are removed, would be reasonable if trade were war or robbery carried on by bandits and men who had organized bands for plunder. But to reason thus is completely to ignore present facts. Wisc agriculture today does not exhaust pletely to ignore present lacts. Nervous Wrecks.

(From "Medical Reports.")

The nervous man seems always tired and worn out. Retiring brings no relief. Sleep brings no refreshment, all because of an abnormal condition of the nervous system, brought about by —well, no matter what—the desire is for relief and freedom with rich, red blood surging through the body supplying the sensitive nerves with all the power of sensation, so that sleep is refreshing, food is delicious, work is play and play is pleasure.

FAMOUS ENGLISH CLOCKS Some in Cathedrals—Others Are In Private Houses

A curious astronomical clock is to b seen in Exeter Cathedral. Below the works is a cabinet which, when opened, displays a miniature belfry with ringers, and the background is painted to represent a number of old buildings in Exeter. This was built by Lovelace, took thirty years to construct and rivals the famous clocks of Wimborne Minster and Wells Cathedral.

At Wimborne is an old clock that has in the centre a globe which represents the carth and the sun and the moon, and the phases of the latter are variously depicted. The clock still goes and the works, which are in a room above, cause a figure outside the tower to strike the quarters. This was the work of a Glaston-bury monk early in the fourteenth century.

Wells has a wonderful clock, one of the oldest in the world, which dates from 1325. When it strikes the hour, says the Queen, four knights on horseback go riding round, and the seated man kicks two small bells with his heels, as he has been doing every fifteen minutes for night on six conturies. with his heels, as he has been doing every fifteen minutes for nigh on six centuries. This clock was the work of Peter Lightfoot, another monk of Glastonbury.

There is a clock at Windsor Castle known as the globe clock. The globe is cnamelled in royal blue; a vertical bar shows the hours and a scythe the minutes. The Isaac Harbrecht clock is on view at the British Museum, and two clocks well worth a visit may be seen at the Soane Museum. The upperworks of one of these revolve once in twelve months and require to be wound only once in every two years. revolve once in twelve months and require to be wound only once in every two years. Interesting old clocks are to be found in private houses. One of these may be seen at Lutterworth. This is a long clock, which has an oval face, a hand that points to the days of the week, completing the round in seven days, another which shows the true dead beat, and a third which points to the chimes and quarters. On the upper part of the clock is a small orchestia, which includes a flute, a 'cello and
