In securing of the dividends were made a matter of considerable importance. "Pro Pelle Cutem," the motto of the company, signifies skin for skin and illustrates that trading, and fur trading principally, was the prime object of the Hudson's Bay Company. The organizers at once fitted out ships which carried traders and merchants to the shores of Hudson Bay and opened uptrade, by barter, with the Indians. Gradually the trade was pushed forward and covered British North America. As the company grew in wealth and power the partners on this side of the wester made their headquarters at Montreal where they lived in great.
