THE TABLES TURNED.

HOW ONE LAWYER GOT THE "HAI" FROM A CLIENT.

The Case Certainly Looked Promising on the Surface, but There Were Phases in It Calculated to Shock the Knight of the Green Bag.

"I turned the tables on a shyster lawyer in rather an amusing fashion not long ago," said a prominent railroad man, "and while I hadn't intended to tell the story, it is really too good to keep. The shysters who make a specialty of bringing damage actions against corporations are the bugbear of the railroads.

"Lately competition has become absolutely ferocious among the damage case shysters of our section, and it has compelled them to resort to desperate expedients. Incredible as it may seem, at least half a dozen of them are at present advertising openly that they will pay liberal fees to anybody who will bring in cases that 'promise good results.' A law-paying instead of demanding a fee is a startling reversal of the usual order of things, and the first time I saw one of the 'ads.' I decided out of mere curiosity to pay the gentleman a visit and ascertain some particulars as to his little game.

"I don't care to locate him definitely, as that would merely exploit his business, and suffice it to say he turned out to be a very smooth looking middle aged individual, nicely quartered in one of the most respectable buildings in town. He was surrounded by a corps of clerks and stenographers, but he led me into a private room, and I proceeded to tell him a good deal about my business. He had been thrown off of one of our passenger trains because he presented a scalper's ticket. Being posted in railroad reading, I dare say I made my yarn pretty circumstantial, and I let him know that I was a small tradesman from the other end of the city. He asked me a number of shrewd questions and finally said he would take the case.

"Up to that moment," the railroad man went on, "I had no inclination of doing more than find out his modus operandi, but it suddenly occurred to me to push the hoax a little further. 'Well, what do I get out of this myself?' I asked. 'I will give you $100 cash,' he replied, 'as soon as I sign a contract with the client, agreeing upon our mutual percentage of whatever is recovered, or I will give you a 5 per cent interest in my fee,' he added, 'whichever you prefer.'

"I told him I would rather have the cash and left, promising to send around my friend. My private clerk is naturally a very solemn looking chap, and when I got back to the office I told him he would have to impersonate the suffering victim of a heartless corporation. He didn't like the idea and was fearful of getting into him over and gave him a thorough coaching in the story he was to tell. I even got an old scalper's ticket to give the narrative realism, and bright and early next day we went around to the shyster's.

"He received us cordially, and my man spun his yarn a great deal better than I expected. He entered into the spirit of the role and looked the spirit of virtuous indignation.

"That's capital," said the lawyer, "and if you do as well on the witness stand it will add a thousand to the verdict. Don't you think your back was hurt a little," he added, "when that brutal conductor put you off the train?"

"My fake claimant said he wouldn't be surprised if it was, and, to make a long story short, they signed a contract by which the attorney was to defray all expenses and get 65 per cent of the gross amount secured and his client 35 per cent. After the document was duly completed I reminded the shyster of my fee. He took me into the back room and handed me two $5 bills.

"I waited with some eagerness for the next development," said the railroad man, "and sure enough on the second day of our visit I received a letter from the shyster himself. It can repeat it almost verbatim from memory. It ran about like this:

"Dear Sir—Mr. — of this city has just placed in my hands a claim for damages against your road. The facts of the case are substantially as follows: Here came a brief recapitulation of the story told in the office, with a few embellishments of his own. 'You will perceive from the statement,' the letter went on, 'that my client has been outrageously misused and has excellent ground for action. I have made it a rule, however, to avoid the expense and delay of litigation whenever the same is possible, and as this case seems to be perfectly plain I feel confident that both justice and expediency will suggest the advisability of meeting me half way in some amicable adjustment outside of court. If you are disposed to take this view of the matter, I will be pleased to confer with your representative at any time and place you may designate. Otherwise I will be compelled to institute vigorous proceedings. Begging the favor of a reply at your earliest convenience, I am, yours truly.'

"I never sat down to write a letter with more enthusiasm in my life," continued the railroad man, "and I suppose my style was whetted by some knowledge of such individuals. Anyhow, this is what I said:

"Dear Sir—Replying to your esteemed favor of even date, I would say that you are quite an easy mark yourself for a gentleman in your interesting line of business. I had the pleasure of interviewing you to your attention the case to which you refer and have contributed my $100 commission to the fresh air fund. I feel confident under the circumstances that both justice and expediency will suggest the advisability of 'lying low.' I will certainly meet you half way and do myself the honor of kicking you down stairs. I am, yours cheerfully.

"I would give some money for a snap shot of my shyster friend as he perused my reply, and I infer it knocked him out temporarily, for it was fully a week before I heard from him again. Then he dropped me a note to the effect that he 'was giving me a gentle dig about the $100 I jockeyed him out of. I must admit it was a pretty clear case of bunko, indefensible on strictly moral grounds, but all fair in war, and it is certainly the only instance on record in which a railroad official actually succeeded in looting a damage suit shyster. I lit my pipe with his last note and haven't heard from him since.'—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

REMOVABLE CELLAR BINS.

A Method of Storing That Gives All Old Advantages With Facilities of Cleaning Added.

Bins in cellars or cold rooms for the storing of potatoes, apples, or vegetables generally, if made of permanent fixtures, are often difficult to clean, preparatory to receiving the new crop. To facilitate this I have contrived a set of removable bins for our cold rooms or above ground cellars, writes J. M. Shull in Orange Judd Farmer. As two such rooms will seldom have the same dimensions I shall not give exact measurements, as they will depend entirely upon the size and shape of the room, and the capacity desired. Ours is a two-story arrangement occupying one end of the room and divided into four bins each with a capacity of 20 bushels.

The room has a cement floor and the foundation walls, which rise eight inches higher, are surmounted with a two-inch oak sill which projects slightly from the double frame wall above. For clearness, Fig. 1 is drawn to show the mere skeleton frame which is made largely of 2 by 4 pine material. To begin with, the crosspiece A should extend from sill to sill across the front line of the bins. A bent piece of heavy bar iron on each end of it rests with one end in a shallow mortise in sill S. Next is the centre post of same material, extending from floor to ceiling. At its lower end is a block reaching from the floor to the underside of A to bear the weight.

To prevent the centre post slipping forward at the bottom, a wire, W, passes from it to a screw-eye in the sill at the rear, and to prevent slipping sideways there are two small blocks on the crosspiece A. A bracket-shaped block at the ceiling receives the centre post from the rear and at the height required for the second floor it is cut in at the back, one inch deep and 3/4 inches wide, to receive the crosspiece B. This beyond the partition boards. The ends of crosspiece B are cut in half their thickness and rests upon a shoulder of upright J, which is nailed permanently to the wall and also forms the partition boards. The ends of crosspiece B are cut in half their thickness and rests upon a shoulder of upright J, which is nailed permanently to the wall and also forms the partition boards.

At the rear, corresponding in height to B, is a board C, also nailed permanently to the wall. On this rests the rear end of the floor boards whose slipping forward is prevented by a cleat which falls just back of the forward crosspiece, serving also to keep this more firmly in place. The lower floor boards are treated in the same manner. Beyond the grooves to receive the sliding boards. This is done with one-inch square strips whose placing can best be determined after the frame is in position, though they do not interfere with the taking apart or putting together of the frame. The centre post is faced with a six-inch board whose projecting edges make part of the grooves for the front boards. In Fig. 2, which shows the completed bins. All parts should be made to fit easily with no tight joints and the whole structure can be quickly removed.

Various combinations can be made. Removing upper floor gives two deep bins of equal size, or the partition may be removed and then there are two, one above the other. Removal of both gives a single large bin, or it may be thrown into three compartments, with the large bin below at either side, or above, as may be desired.

Labor Saving in Farming.

It is stated by the experts of the department of agriculture that 70 years ago, or in 1830, it cost a little more than three hours' work to produce and harvest a bushel of wheat. At the price then of 6 cents an hour the labor expense was 18 cents a bushel. Now a bushel of wheat is produced and harvested in each minute's labor spent on it as an average, and while wages and cost of the use of machinery are estimated at 20 cents an hour the cost per bushel is but 8-3 cents.

When Rheumatism doubles a man up physician and sufferer alike lose heart and often despair of a cure, but here's the exception. Wm. Peg of Norwood, Ont., says: "I was nearly doubled up with rheumatism. I got three bottles of South American Rheumatic Cure and they cured me. It's the quickest acting medicine I ever saw."—18
