CHAPTER XXX.

AT PLYMOUTH ROCK.

The history of the Pilgrim Fathers is so well known that there is not anything new to be said about them from a general standpoint; but as it is our privilege to visit the scene of their landing, we will write a few lines in reference to what we really saw. The town of Plymouth itself is one of the most beautiful settlements in New England, and it still bears the impress of colonial life, and is more an English town than an American city. In commercial circles the town is noted for its great rope industry; but in the realm of romance and religious sentiment, it is renowned for its associations with the Pilgrim Fathers (three hundred years ago). These associations have always clung to Plymouth, and whenever the name of the Pilgrim Fathers is mentioned, the harbour of Plymouth, Plymouth Rock, and usually the story of debate.

We have always been taught that the Pilgrim Fathers were a band of God-fearing people, who, for the sake of their principles sacrificed their all in the home-land, and came to New England, and colonized Cape Cod, and founded the town of Plymouth. This was taught, and this we believed. Our faith received a rude shock when talking to a man during our visit to the place. The man was standing near the Rock, and we thought that he held a common interest in the associations, entered into conversation with him. But we found ourselves at sea. The man did not believe in the story of the Pilgrim Fathers; he had been taught it. He had sympathy whatever with the history of the "Mayflower," and said that what was written as history about her arrival and landing in Plymouth Harbour, was like a good deal of other history—unauthentic and incorrect. (The Rock did not belong to the place.)

For such a set back as this we were fully prepared; but about the time of our visit to Plymouth, we happened to pick up a copy of Munsey's Magazine among its contributions we saw a very lengthy, and quite an exhaustive article on the Pilgrim Fathers. Our further surprise the author of the article dealt hard blows at the story of the Pilgrim Fathers, and very itself. The Rock looks grim and sombre, and is a stern reminder of the event which has immortalized it. Upon this Rock stepped the Pilgrim Fathers, and they in turn assisted the gentle women of their party, as they alighted from the boat, when they had left the "Mayflower" in the offing. What the thoughts of those good people were we may not exactly know; but certain it is, that they had strong faith in God, and acknowledged Him in all their ways. As Mrs. Hemans so beautifully says:—

"Amidst the storm they sang,
And the stars heard, and the sea,
And the sounding aisles of the dim woods rang
To the anthem of the sea."

A Determined Chinaman

Within the confines of Melrose, a mere gathering of buildings in the suburbs of the City of Oakland, Alameda County, California, there existed, previous to July the 19th, 1898, a factory known to the people of the Western States as the Western Fuse Works. From this factory fuse was shipped to all parts of the world, and on account of the recent gold excitement in Alaska, its machinery had hardly ceased its hum for a period of four months. On July 18th, however, a deadly silence reigned. Gong Ung Chung, the Chinese foreman of the works, quarrelled with a fellow countryman, Hun Hi Sing, over a ten-cent lottery ticket, saying that a prize had been won, but that Sing had kept the money. Sing was an honest man, but his denial was not heeded. Chung first assaulted him with a hatchet, and then shot him dead. Chung then barricaded himself in the powder magazine, where there were stored 5,000 rounds of powder, threatening to explode the lot if anyone attempted to enter. The Sheriff and his posse were sent for, and a Chinese interpreter told Chung that if he would surrender, he should have the services of the best attorney in the State of California, while the superintendent of the works (where Chung had worked for fifteen years) said he would do all in his power to save him from the gallows. Chung asked him, as a friend to leave the premises, for he would not surrender. He sat there without food or drink throughout the long day. Twilight gave place to darkness, and darkness to the light of dawn, when one of the Sheriff's men, thinking that Chung was asleep, proposed an attack upon his stronghold. One of the officers, rifle in hand, advanced cautiously towards the door, followed by a dozen more. But as he entered, the murderer sprang forward and was heard to shout in a fiendish manner, "You come, me shoot!" What followed will never be known, but it was evident that Chung had fired the dynamite. The first seven men were blown to bits, five others were maimed for life. Thus, the lives of nine men, including Chung and Hi Sing, were lost for the sake of a ten-cent ticket in a game of chance. In addition, he maimed five other persons, destroyed an entire factory worth thousands of dollars, completely wrecked over thirty homes, and shattered hundreds of panes of glass within a radius of five miles around his deadly abode.

Dublin Denounces American Law.

"The Minister of Foreign Affairs for the Irish Republic" does not seem to have made much progress in securing the release of Jim Larkin, now imprisoned in the United States, following his conviction on a charge of inciting anarchy. We do not know just who the Minister in question is, but unless he hurries up and does something he is likely to lose his job. In the meantime the high judicial authorities of the United States should tremble because the Dublin (Ireland) Corporation has ordered this great though anonymous statesman to get on their trail.

Jim Larkin, as most readers are aware, was formerly a strike agitator in Dublin, but for reasons best known to himself transferred his residence to New York. Not content with twisting the lion's tail, he commenced to try and pull the tail feathers out of the eagle, whereat the eagle picked him up in its talons and dropped him into the penitentiary under indeterminate sentence of not less than five years. The occurrence seems to have been a shock to the Dublin Corporation, which apparently assumed that in the United States aliens were above the law, and free to advocate the overthrow of existing institutions to their heart's content. It therefore framed a resolution expressing grave doubts as to the impartiality of Larkin's trial, and instructing the President of the Irish Republic, Citizen Eamonn de Valera, to exercise his influence with the American authorities and his authority with the Irish race in America to secure Larkin's release. It will be interesting news to many Americans to learn that Citizen de Valera exercises an extra-territorial authority on the soil of the United States.

The possibility that some Americans might even be rather annoyed by the suggestion seems to have occurred to certain members of the Dublin Corporation; for it subsequently amended the resolution by eliminating the instructions against expressing "dismay and regret" at a prison sentence being imposed on "a fellow Irishman of such considerable influence." Further, the town clerk was instructed to apply to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Irish Republic to obtain from our American Ambassador a full report on the whole question. When that report is forthcoming, the American authorities had best look out for squalls, for it is quite evident that they have taxed the patience of the Dublin Corporation. The latter organization is likely to demand a Foreign Minister who can really wield the big stick over the American republic.—Saturday Night.

Ice Cream is very grateful in hot weather. Taken in due moderation, it is one of the most refreshing of luxuries, but is a light and digestive food. A little fruit added to form a Sandae makes Ice Cream even more pleasing and appetizing. The Ice Cream we supply is reliable in every way. Made of pure materials, in a cleanly way, nicely flavored and agreeably sweetened, our Ice Cream "goes down" well. And only the best preserved fruit is used in our College Ices and Sundae. Looked at every way, a dish of Ice Cream at McMurdo's is a real dainty.
