

The Foster Brother; The Orphan of the Wreck.

CHAPTER XXIX.
FRIENDS IN COUNCIL—EVIL NEWS FROM ARD-GOWAN—THE SUDEN JOURNEY.

"Do you mean not to claim your rights?" he asked. "Do you not mean to force from them our inheritance, and call them to a heavy reckoning for the fraud by which you have been kept out of it?"

"My inheritance I must claim," replied George. "Duty to my dead father, as well as to myself, demands that; but beyond that—when you speak of exposure and punishment—a recoil. Not for your father's sake, I am free to say, and still less, as you may understand, for the sake of that scoundrel Garret, whom I confess I have a desire to come down heavily upon—no, not on their account, but for the sake of my friend and brother Harry Markham, and for her sake who is dear to me as my own soul."

"Bravo, George—just what I expected," cried Manby, with hearty satisfaction. "Generosity, pure and simple, would in a case like this be an abuse of that noble quality. Captain Gibson and Garret deserve nothing at your hands, and should receive no forbearance. Only you cannot inflict the stroke of justice without wounding the innocent—the innocent whom you would make every sacrifice to shield from grief and harm. They may thank their stars, therefore, that there is something to interpose as a shield between them and their deserts."

"You, I am certain, approve of my intention, Manby," exclaimed George.

"Entirely. I would not have you forego your rights. Ardgowan must be yours, and there, by the way, you cut out Harry, who has till now considered himself the heir."

"Never was a man out out with more infinite satisfaction," said Harry, emphatically.

"More than that," added Manby. "I would use the power you have gained to obtain the dearest object of your heart. The Captain would not give Lillias to the poor tutor, but I suspect he will not refuse her to the owner of Ardgowan."

"She would have been his in any case," observed Harry. "I had fully determined that."

"Ah, well, but it is an advantage to have the way smoothed in this fashion," laughed the doctor. "And now," he added, "I will leave you to digest the wonderful revelation while I before supper dispose of my correspondence. My letters are still unopened, and some of them no doubt require reply. But don't restrain your conversation under the idea that you will disturb me. I have the faculty of abstracting myself from much greater noise than you will make. So use your liberty, I beg, and speak as if I were not in the room at all."

"All right, Lister; we shall suit ourselves," said Harry, as the doctor withdrew to a side table, where lay a pile of unopened letters which had come by that day's post but which, in the excited occupation of that memorable day, had remained unattended to till now. From his position as medical superintendent of a large district asylum, Doctor Manby had necessarily to conduct a large correspondence. Also, though a young man, his professional skill was considered of a high order, and many cases of consultation came to him. He was therefore, at all times a busy, much occupied man; and being enthusiastically devoted to the noble—their vine occupation of his life, he bade fair to come to a high position in the medical world.

Left on the sofa by themselves, George and Harry were soon deep in conversation on the thrilling discovery that had been made by the instrumentality of Walloy.

The Missouri Disaster.
ANOTHER MARVELOUS ESCAPE.

Richard Smith, another survivor from the burned steamer Missouri, has arrived at Nassau. Smith was the man who abandoned Conway's boat and swam to the capsized boat for the purpose of righting her. Conway cut the painter connecting the two boats and they drifted out of sight of each other. Smith and Alfred Steward, drifted with the boat bottom upward for three days at the mercy of the waves. On the fourth day they managed to right the boat, and making a sail from life-preservers they finally landed on the most western key of Abaco on the seventh day. After landing Steward died from a fever produced by exhaustion. Smith caught a little rain water on the ninth day and that with prickly pears and soft-shell crabs sustained him until the seventeenth day when he was taken off the island and brought to Nassau. He goes to New York on the steamer Columbia.

"Do you call this a trunk?" growled a dejected porter. "It only needs a lightning rod to be mistaken for a boarding-house."
