Cherries are 80 per cent water, on the average. A full cup of cherries, when eaten, makes a healthy portion. They are acid, with a relatively small sugar content, except the very large, firm ones, which are sweet and juicy. Cherries can be dried in syrup and called maraschino, is distilled from cherries, and for flavor and decoration in rich desserts. A rich syrup preserving the flavor of maraschino, but not fermented is now to be had also. It is a delicious dessert, of great use in making pretty desserts of fruit cup or crust.

VIII.—EVE'S "CAREER"

Eve leaned back luxuriously in the New York taxi and cast a coquettish eye upon her escort Julian Vandaveer.

"What! I'm so glad and thankful to be back in town. The country bores me stiff. I felt I couldn't stand it. I hate the country. Oh, how I hate the country and chickens and the simple life!" Thus spoke Eve.

Julian Vandaveer eyed her quizzically. "And the rustic, backwoods love—how is he?"

Eve made a little face. "I'm terribly fed up with him. He's such an idealist. I have to live with him and the worst of it is that he's a wreck."

Julian smiled. "A very pretty wreck," commented he. "He looks a careless arm about Eve's waist and drew her closer to him. 'I haven't seen you for six days, my dear. What about giving me a kiss?'"

Eve sat up and favored her amorous cavalier with a glance that was intended to be severe.

"Julian, you know I hate to be pawed about. You men are all the same. You want to see me for six days, my dear. What about giving me a kiss?"
