In appealing against the 1923 assessment, R. G. Ivey, vice-president of the railway, said that the assessment had steadily been raised from $3,000 in 1900 to the figure of this year's assessment. In the course of arguing the case for the road, he admitted that it cost the road $25,000 to build a mile of the track, which they were assessed for at $15,000. Commissioner Bennett thought his assessment an entirely just one, and .. 2 2 3 when Chairman P. B. Fetterly remarked: "It's most unfortunate that 3 3 2 this increase in assessment should
