The Weekly British Colonist.

Wednesday May 4, 1870.

Employ the Means. It is only when men use the ordinary means suggested by common sense and experience that they have any right to expect satisfactory results. Looking at the subject of population and settlement, one cannot but be struck with the marked neglect to employ ordinary means by which the history of British Columbia is distinguished.

It is not our intention in the present article to take up that branch of the subject which relates to bringing population into the country, but merely to do with the scarcely less important duty of retaining in the colony those who come. What appears to us to be one of the most important duties of the Government, in this connection, is a systematic effort to assist people in settling upon the public lands.

By this we do not mean actual money assistance—that we would not approve of such a plan because the finances are not in a condition to admit of it during the present year. The assistance allude to is of a different kind. The Lands and Works Department should be transformed into a more thorough practical institution than it may, perhaps, be regarded at present.

In its connection with it should be intelligent and obliging officers, possessed of just such information as the intended settler stands in need of. The desirable districts for settlement, occupied lands therein, the improvements thereon, the unoccupied lands, the nature of the soil, the facilities and the cost of moving supplies in productions out, all these should be made to feel that he is wanted and appreciated.

It appears from late changes that in the Province of New Brunswick a considerable sum has been voted for the purpose of directing emigrants onto Homesteads. Let our Government employ the means and trust Providence for results, instead of, hitherto, trusting Providence for both.
