Goderich, 6th June, 1855.

ROBERT COOPER.

Yellow carrets possess a great deal of nourishment, are hearty, strong, and healthy food. They can be raised at a much less expense than an equal value of corn or grain crop, are just as easy fed, and supply the cattle with that vegetable food which they would not otherwise get during the winter months. I have known persons to commence spring work with poor cattle and by feeding carrots twice a day, and corn once a day, (at noon,) with hay or com stalks, to work their cattle every working day, and have them gain flesh and get fat by the time the work was done, and at a much less cost than to have fed and at a much less cost than to have fed grain alone. Three years ago, about the first of March, I purchased a yoke of steers which were in low condition. I fed them earrots twice a day until the middle of the month, also plenty of corn stalks. At this time I commenced working them; I fed them corn in addition to the carrots once a ders day, with plenty of salt. I worked them hard and fed them well; they gained in hard and fed them well; they gained in day. flesh rapidly, and the 10th of May they Goderich, Office at Market Square. 2-m were at to butcher. I had done a great deal of hauling and work upon the farm, besides over 30 acres of plowing, and I now sold them for more than I paid for n, and they commanded a ready sale ready pay. There were cattle that nesh equally as fat as the first yoke gained; besides in hot days they would hang their tongues out of their mouths, as if asking for earrots; and as to this, I can say that I never saw an ox "loil" that was fed unon yellow carrots. I cansil yellow carrots. I consider them equally as good for cows, and if you wish good, sweet, Cattle may not like them very well at first; if so, sprinkle some salt over them, and they will soon begin to like them. It is very little trouble to raise root crops of any kind, and particularly so with the carany kind, and particularly so with the carrot. All the attention necessary upon a quarter of an acre can be given for "neon spels," or in rainy half days, and between times of other work, and thus cost the farmer comparatively nothing until they are ready to pull, and fit for winter use.

This should be done before the frost disturbs them much. turbs them much. Sow your seed in drills about fiftee sow your seed in drins about fitteen aches apart, and then thin to four or six inches, as you choose. The seed should be placed in the ground about the first of June, or earlier. The ground should be made as mellow as time and convenience will allow. The more attention you pay to having your soil in order to receive the seed, the surer you are of a good crop. Cover your seed with the earth very lightly, A brush dragged across the drills will cover them sufficiently. Make your rows straight

Now, brother farmers, if you have a spare piece of ground, (and if not, make some vacant,) plant enough carrots to feed your stock, and if you have not cattle to feed, give them to your horses or sheep; they will answer them equally as well, and if you are not satisfied with the benefit arising therefrom, then it will be time for you to of ject. E. WOOLVERTON, Milan Ohio.

Home Made Guano.—As there is a good deal said about guano, and home made fer-Last summer, in July, I cleared out my hen-roost, and found about two bushels. of ngs. I had about one quarter to third of an acre of corn, in a place where I could not well get at it with the cultivator, without doing more damage than I expected the crop to be worth. I planted it about the 9th of June, intending to subdue it with the hoe. It was so wet that I could do but little with it. However, I went over it once after a sort, cut down the weeds, and then applied my guano. This I prepared as follows: To the two bushels of hen droppings, I put about four bushels of aches from the ash house, and ground them together, as a mason mixes his moriar. Of this mixture I applied about half a pint to the hill. I husked thirty-four bushels of ears from this piece. There was a good growth of stalks, of a good color, broad leaf, &c. Had the piece been cultivated as corn ground should be, I think you will agree with me that I should have had a great crop. D .- Gates, N. Y.

is entertained by some that the only value of leached ashes is the potash they contain.
We recollect seeing a field of wheat several years since, on a portion of which unleached wood ashes had been spread, and on a contigous, portion, leached ashes, from a heap which had been exposed to the weather for many years. The same quantity of leached and put wheehed. of leached and unleached ashes were ap plied to the same extent of ground. The wheat on both lots showed a decided superiority over the rest of the field, but the appearance of the grain, as to yield and quality, where the leached ashes were spread, was equal, or if anything, super to that on the other lot. A correspond to that on the other lot. A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker says he has seen in New York, "valuable crops of wheat raised on lands nearly exhausted, by manuring them in the ordinary way, with leached ashes. The ashes, which kad been exposed to the weather for years, spread over the ground and thor mixed with the soil before the see sation with Paoli Lathrop, Esq., of South Hadley Falls, he stated to us that he had derived great advantage from sowing spring wheat and oats together, the crop to be used for horse feed, whole or ground. He stated that the wheat kept the eats from failing by which many the property of the cats from failing by which many the cats from failing by which was the cats from failing by which many the cats from failing by which was the cats from the cats from the cats of failing, by which means they filled better, and that the mixed crop gave as many bushels as would have been obtained of oats, while the value was considerably greater. The proportion of seed is one-third wheat and two-thirds oats—three

THE HOLY INQUISITION INTO PROPLE'S KITCHENS. The pious order of Sacconi, just institut ed by the Apostolic Hierarchy have received their euphonious name because they are clad in a sack with a hood, a cord round their loins, sandals on their feet, and a vei with holes to look through. The Sacconi rejoice in the office of the Janissaries of the Holy Inquisition. They have the right "to enter all kitchens," to "uncover pots," and lay bare to the light of day the secret recesses of "stew-pans." They are to examine with a stern severity into violations of Friday fast. It is their duty to rummage desks and escritoires, to have very severity into violations of desks and escritoires, to have very severity into violations of desks and escritoires, to have very severity into violations of desks and escritoires, to have very severity into violations of desks and escritoires, to have very severity into violations of desks and escritoires, to have very severity into violations of the very severity into violations of desks and escritoires, to have very severity into violations of desks and escritoires, to have very severity into violations of the very severity severity into violations of the very severity into violations of very severity into violations of very severity into violations of ve desks and escritoires, to hunt waste-paper baskets, study privy packets, and track "every trace of implety or revolution," wherever it may hide itself. They are to denounce blasphemers" against the Pope, and, of course, against themselves, for which they are promised sacks in the fine of fifteen bajocchi. Considering the temperament of cooks in general, and of Italian cooks in cooks in general, and of Italian cooks in particular, and considering the exploration of the pots and pans to be carned out by the Sacconi, we should imagine that these gentlemen will make rather a good thing of their perquisities for blasphemy. The work of the Sacconi, though important in the kitchen, is by no means confined to it. At 8 p.m., when the bell sounds for the Angelus, the Sacconi are "to set down on paner those who don't kneel down in the Angelus, the Sacconi are "to set down on paper those who don't kneel down in the street, and denounce them," to the Holy
