

LITTLE SUNSHINE.

If every little child in the world had the right to be called, "Little Sunshine," what a bright place this old earth would be! By having the right, I mean having the characteristics of the great sun which shines in the sky, that is, the power of spreading sweetness and light, and scattering gloom and shadow. You know wherever the sun shines there cannot be darkness. So wherever the light and love of a good child shines there cannot be sadness. Let each child try to be like the beautiful sunshine.

Have you a bamboo bookcase or chair in your house? Well, the bambóo was a tall grass, as high as the house, before you saw it, and it grew in a country across the ocean. Chinese plant this grass, and it grows four or five years before they cut it. They can make it into houses and boats and fans and hats, and even paper.
