

	PAGE
Chapter 4. THE SECOND WORLD WAR AND ITS AFTERMATH: A COUNTRY WITHOUT A SCIENCE POLICY.....	61
Moments of great decision.....	63
Two new versions of NRC's 1919 model.....	64
The crucial fifties: NRC's model and Canadian self-sufficiency.....	71
1. The Canadian nuclear energy program.....	72
2. Military aircraft development.....	78
3. Computer technology.....	83
Conclusion.....	83
 Chapter 5. THE 1960s: A SECOND ATTEMPT AT BUILDING A CANADIAN SCIENCE POLICY.....	 89
The findings of the Glassco Commission.....	90
The Glassco recommendations.....	93
The government response.....	96
The implementation of Dr. Mackenzie's recommendations.....	100
The present science policy mechanism.....	102
The initiatives of the '60s.....	106
Conclusion.....	110
 Chapter 6. THE CANADIAN SCIENCE EFFORT IN AN INTERNATIONAL PERSPECTIVE.....	 117
The limitations of the Committee's international review.....	118
The overall R & D input.....	119
The main R & D sectors.....	124
Performance and funding.....	127
The output of the national R & D effort.....	134
The social sciences and public welfare.....	141
Canada's special position and the hidden science policy.....	142
Appendices: 1.....	154
2.....	156
 Chapter 7. A REVIEW OF THE EVIDENCE BEFORE THE COMMITTEE: THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SECTOR.....	 161
Scientific and technological information.....	162
The national R & D effort: the nature of its distribution and its aggregate level.....	165
The problem of manpower.....	171
The sectors of performance.....	174
Government Laboratories and granting institutions.....	177
Central machinery and overall science policy.....	183
Conclusion.....	188