INFORMATION RELATING TO INDIVIDUAL TAX RETURNS

Question No. 647—Mr. Beatty:

1. Under what circumstances may the Department of National Revenue make available to a third party personally-identifiable information relating to an individual's tax return without obtaining the prior consent of the individual in question?

2. Were any requests for personally-identifiable information concerning individual tax returns received in 1975 and, if so (a) from which departments, agencies, individuals or organizations (b) in how many instances did the Department accede to such requests?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Section 241 of the Income Tax Act prohibits communication of any return and its content, including personally-identifiable information, other than for the purpose of administration of this Act or in response to a subpoena from a criminal court. In addition, subsection 241(4) allows the provision of returns or their contents, under conditions prescribed in Regulation 3000, to the provincial governments for which there is a federal-provincial tax collection agreement, for the purpose of administration of an Act that imposes a tax similar to those imposed under the Income Tax Act. Identifiable information derived from income tax returns is provided to other federal agencies where there is entitlement through one or more federal statutes. Such is the case with the Statistics Act which authorizes the furnishing of identifiable data to Statistics Canada, and the Canada Pension Plan Act and the Old Age Security Act which authorize release of the content of income tax returns to Health and Welfare Canada. While providing entitlement, these statutes also provide sanctions against secondary disclosures. In addition, information exchanges exist with governments of other countries under reciprocal income tax treaties.

2. During 1975, requests for personally-identifiable data as extracted from personal income tax returns were received from Statistics Canada, Health and Welfare Canada and from all provinces under federal-provincial tax collection agreements. All requests were acceded to, as legal entitlement was clear.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL REGULATIONS

Question No. 809—Mr. Leggatt:

1. How many inspectors are enforcing the requirements of the Atomic Energy Control Regulations?

2. From which (a) federal (b) provincial departments were they seconded?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: 1. Sixty.

2. (a) none; (b) none.
